Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many powerpacks had to be changed in Challenger I tanks during the Gulf operation; who that powerpack differs from the one in Challenger II; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: A total of 279 powerpacks were changed during the deployment of Challenger I to the Gulf. The majority of engine failures were caused by dust ingestion.

The Challenger II powerpack comprises of CV12 engine coupled to a TN54 gearbox which has six instead of the four forward ratios of the Challenger I gearbox. The powerpack, which is controlled by a new digital automotive system control unit, represents a significant improvement in reliability. In addition to a totally new main engine cleaner design, numerous reliability modifications have been embodied in the engine and the gearbox.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response he made to the request of the manufacturers for the release of a Challenger II battle tank in order to seek to win the Swedish Army order.

Mr. Aitken: Vickers Defence Systems made no request for the release of a Challenger II prototype in order to participate in the Swedish competition.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been achieved in the plans announced in June 1991 for an upgrade programme on the Challenger 1 fleet.

Mr. Aitken: A detailed study has been undertaken by Vickers Defence Systems and this is now under evaluation by the Department. A range of options is being considered.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Market testing is being handled as part of the Department's devolved management strategy. Its central market testing service, which offers advice and assistance to managers, currently comprises nine officials at an annual cost in salaries and ERNIC of about £260,000. Conduct of the market testing programme is the responsibility of the management areas themselves: some staff are dedicated to market testing but most carry out this function as part of their normal duties. It is not practicable to identify staff numbers or costs without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the succesful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is as follows:

Invergordon Depot

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards the disposal of his Department's fuel depot and pier facilities at Invergordon, with particular reference to the likely time scale involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Bids for the surplus oil fuel depot Invergordon complex are under consideration following competitive tender action in October 1992 and in the light of subsequent negotiations. We hope to be able to announce a decision soon.

Submarines

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects each of the Upholder class of submarines to enter service with the Royal Navy; what is the final cost estimate for each Upholder class submarine; what general plans he has for deployment of the submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Upholder was accepted by the Royal Navy in December 1990 and re-entered service, following completion of modifications to her weapon handling and discharge systems (WHDS), last month. HMS Unseen and HMS Ursula were accepted by the Royal Navy in July 1991 and June 1992, respectively and are due to have their WHDS modifications carried out later this year, allowing them to re-enter service in early 1994. Unicorn is planned to enter service, with WHDS modifications already incorporated, this summer. For commercial reasons, it is not our practice to disclose the cost of individual warships. The overall programme cost is however, expected to be similar in real terms to that shown in table 3·2 volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991." It is not our practice to disclose details of the operational deployment of Royal Navy submarines.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for sale of Upholder class submarines; and what discussions he has had with the Government of Canada about such sales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decisions affecting Upholder class submarines have been taken.

Wizard Generator

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to upgrade the Wizard generator at RAF Edzell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A contract has been placed to refurbish power generation at RAF Edzell and work will begin on the site on 1 March 1993.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the total expenditure on drug abuse prevention programmes for the Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force in each year since 1985, in constant 1992 prices; and how many people were employed to administer these programmes, in each year since 1985;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, columns 373-74, how many service personnel dismissed from the services for drug-related offences were stationed overseas at the time; and in what countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Ministry Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to whom Ministry land at Berry Head, Brixham, has been sold; and if conditions were attached to the sale to ensure that the land will continue to be a refuge for wildlife.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The sale has not yet been completed and the name of the potential purchaser, therefore, remains commercial in confidence. No conditions on future use have been attached by the Ministry of Defence; however, consultations with the local planning authority clearly indicate that it will strenuously resist development for use other than for agriculture, leisure/amenity or open space.

Composite Signals Organisation Station

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the tendering arrangements for the contract to build an antenna at CSOS Morwenstow.

Mr. Hurd: I have been asked to reply.

The competitive tender exercise for the procurement of an antenna for the composite signals organisation station Morwenstow was carried out in accordance with the standard Government procurement guidelines. Companies with the relevant capabilities were invited to submit tenders by the end of December 1992.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the winner of the contract to build an antenna at CSOS Morwenstow.

Mr. Hurd: I have been asked to reply.

The contract should be awarded before the end of February.

HEALTH

District Health Authorities, Manchester

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy with regard to the merger of district health authorities within Greater Manchester; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We are prepared to consider mergers where they are clearly in the interests of patients.

North Western regional health authority has encouraged district health authorities to form purchasing consortia. From 1 April 1993, the following consortia will operate within Greater Manchester:

North, Central and South Manchester and Salford DHAs;
Oldham and Tameside and Glossop DHAs;
Bolton and Wigan DHAs;
Bury and Rochdale DHAs.

Any proposals to merge these, or any, DHAs would be subject to full public consultation.

High Blood Pressure

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service prescriptions were written for products used in the treatment of high blood pressure in each year since 1987; and what assessment has been made of the effects of her Department's initiative in encouraging doctors to screen more patients on the number of prescriptions written for these products.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not possible to calculate to what extent any increase is due to doctors carrying out screening programmes. The remaining information is given in the table

Products used in the treatment of high blood pressure
England
(as defined by British National Formulary chapters 2.2, 2.4, 2.5 and 2.6)

Thousands

Year	Prescriptions
1987	51,088·8
1988	51,860·1
1989	53,247·0
1990	54,308·6
1991	59,626·3

Notes:

1. The data for 1991 is not directly comparable to those for earlier years because of a change in the way in which these data are collected.
2. From January 1991, the data are based on:
   (a) items. Previously they were based on prescription fees and some items may attract more than one fee.
   (b) prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors and personal administration by doctors. Previously they only covered prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors.
3. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Prescriptions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the extent any increase in the number of NHS prescriptions written so far this year has resulted from her Department's policy of (a) encouraging doctors to carry out screening programmes for certain detectable conditions and (b) requiring doctors to achieve target levels for patients needing vaccination against a variety of various diseases.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not possible to calculate to what extent any increase is due to these policies.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are her Department's plans for doctors to indicate on a prescription form, FP10, the diagnosis for which a medicine is being prescribed, other than for a licensed indication; and how she will be able to protect patient confidentiality;

(2) what consultations she has held with consumer and patient organisations over her plans for requiring doctors to indicate on the FP10 prescription form the diagnosis for which a particular medicine is being prescribed, in order to meet the requirement of the new terms of reference for the Advisory Committee on NHS drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no such plans.

London School of Hygiene

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the publications and research projects funded by her Department at the small area statistics unit of the London School of Hygiene.

Dr. Mawhinney: The small area health statistics unit is funded jointly by the Department of Health, the Department of the Environment, the Health and Safety Executive, the Scottish Office, the Welsh Office and the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland. A list of the unit's publications and of the research projects completed and in progress will be placed in the Library.

Oral Health

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the national public expenditure on oral health promotion in the last five years; and what are the projected figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94;

(2) how much money in real terms was spent in each of the last five years on oral health promotion in each district.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responsibility for arranging for the provision of dental health education and preventive programmes is for district health authorities. Information on the total cost of such programmes is not available centrally.

Since the publication of the 1987 White Paper "Promoting Better Health", more than £1·8 million has been provided from central funds to support innovative local projects. This includes £265,000 in 1992-93. Final decisions about any central funding for 1993-94 have not yet been made.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what total allocation of additional resources she has made to implement the oral health strategy targets in the "Health of the Nation" White Paper in the coming five years; and when she will publish details of the implementation plan for the strategy.

Dr. Mawhinney: The "Health of the Nation" White Paper does not include oral health strategy targets.

Dentists

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists have deregistered, or have refused to accept for NHS treatment (a) adults, (b) children under 18 years, (c) families with a certificate for full help with cost of NHS services, (d) those in full-time education under 19 years, (e) expectant mothers, (f) mothers with babies up to the age of 12 months and (g) anyone receiving income support or family credit.

Dr. Mawhinney: Between 3 July 1992 and 5 February 1993, 1,586 dentists (of a total of 15,433 at 30 September 1992) gave notice to family health services authorities of their intention to deregister 358,300 (1·74 per cent.) adult patients and 182 dentists gave notice of their intention to deregister 1,196 (less than 1 per cent.) child patients. During this same period there was a net increase of 600,000 in the number of adult registrations. Dentists are independent contractors and are free to accept or refuse patients for national health service treatment. The remaining information requested is not held centrally.

Tobacco Advertising

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints are received, per year, about alleged breaches of the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of alleged breaches referred to the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship since its inception is set out in the table.

Number of alleged breaches of voluntary agreements

Year	Number
1987-88	462
1988-89	65
1989-90	168
1990-91	120
1991-92	119

Further information is set out in the annual reports of the committee, copies of which are available in the Library.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff in her Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost her Department since November 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: A market testing unit of two people has been set up to co-ordinate the Department's programme. A number of other staff working within the functional areas affected are spending part of their time on work associated with market testing.

Between November 1991 and the end of March 1993 it is estimated that the programme will have cost in the region of £830,000. This includes consultancy costs, staff costs and associated overheads.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the market tests that have taken place in her Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Since November 1991, the market testing of office and building services for the new buildings of Skipton house in London and Quarry house in Leeds (a joint DH/DSS building) has been completed. It has resulted in the award of the following service level agreements or contracts for services which had previously been provided wholly or mainly in-house in the Department's other buildings:

For Skipton house
Facilities management—Procord Ltd
Reception and conference room booking—In-house team
Office support services—In-house team

For Quarry house
Facilities management—P and O TFM Ltd
Office support services—Manpower UK

Blood Donors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of blood donor donations in each national health service region since 1988; and if he will express this figure as a percentage of the population in each region.

Mr. Sackville: The table gives the numberof donations collected in each region from 1988 to 1991 together with the populations which fell into the age band eligible to give blood. The numbers of donors making these donations are not known centrally and so cannot be expressed as a percentage of each region's eligible population.

Notes:

[1] The eligible age band for blood donors is 18 to 65 inclusive.

[2] The eligible donor population figures are for 1988, the latest year available.

Limited List

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what studies she has commissioned among practising clinicians to look into the clinical implications of extending the limited list to include 10 additional therapeutic categories; and if she will publish the results;

(2) what specific steps are being taken by her Department to ensure that pharmaceutical companies are not deterred from bringing forward applications for new product licences by uncertainty about the possibility of a subsequent inclusion in the limited list.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she commissioned among practising clinicians to look into the clinical implications of extending the limited list proposals to 10 additional therapeutic categories; and whether she intends to publish the results of those studies.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such studies were commissioned. The changes do not affect the basic structure of the selected list scheme which has been in operation since 1985. It will be for the advisory committee on national health service drugs, when it considers individual drugs in the new categories, to ensure that the clinical needs of patients continue to be met.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what stage in the regulatory process involving the Committee on the Safety of Medicines, and the relevant expert advisory committees on (a) the existing categories and (b) the 10 new proposed categories of the limited list prescribing system for pharmaceutical products, a new product for which a product licence was being sought would be considered for inclusion in the limited list; what timetable would be followed for such consideration; and whether such consideration would be automatic.

Dr. Mawhinney: The advisory committee on national health service drugs would only consider a new product which had been licensed and was available for prescription. New products in the specified categories are normally drawn to the committee's attention by its secretariat and the committee is asked whether it wishes to review them.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment has been made in respect of (a) the existing categories and (b) the 10 new proposed categories of the limited list prescribing system for pharmaceutical products, of the impact of the deterrent effect of a possible limited list inclusion upon the decision of companies considering whether or not to incur the costs of bringing forward a product licence application;

(2) what specific steps are being taken by her Department to ensure that pharmaceutical companies are not deterred from bringing forward applications for new product licences by uncertainty about the possibility of a subsequent inclusion in the limited list.

Dr. Mawhinney: The advisory committee on national health service drugs is required to ensure that drugs to meet all clinical need in the specified categories can be provided as economically as possible. There is nothing in the provisions of the selected list scheme which need deter companies from bringing forward applications for new product licences.

Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has invited the Royal College of General Practitioners to make nominations for membership of the advisory committee on NHS drugs.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has invited the Royal College of General Practitioners to make nominations for membership of the newly constituted advisory committee on national health service drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Royal College of General Practitioners was one of the professional bodies which we consulted before appointing the new members of the committee whose names I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 10 February at column 697.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of employees in her Department is registered disabled.

Mr. Sackville: At 11 February 1993 1·3 per cent. of the Department's employees were registered disabled. In addition, a number of staff have a disability but are not registered disabled.

Advisory Group on Rehabilitation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current membership of the advisory group on rehabilitation; what are its revised terms of reference; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The current membership of the advisory group on rehabilitation is: Lord Holderness (Chairman), Mrs. Mary Baker, Professor Anne Chamberlain, Mrs. Anne Davies, Miss Nadia Deadman, Dr. Pamela Enderby, Mr. Stuart Fletcher, Lord McColl, Professor Lindsey McLellan, Miss Carol Underwood, Miss Anne Walker and Dr. Karen Waters.

The task of the advisory group on rehabilitation is to advise the Department of Health on the most effective means of promoting the development of rehabilitation in England and achieving its recognition as a key area in the strategy for health. This will cover topics such as collaboration between statutory and voluntary bodies; the tasks which fall to health authorities in their purchasing role; research; specialised education and training of rehabilitation professionals and the conduct of a programme of collaborative development work with the national health service.

HELIOS Programme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has made to the EC Social Affairs Committee concerning the reduction in funding of the HELIOS programme.

Mr. Yeo: There has been no reduction. The first HELIOS programme finished in December 1991 and discussions on the second programme, including its overall budget, are continuing. The European Commission originally requested 5·6 million ecus for the second HELIOS programme in 1993. The Council has put that sum in reserve, at the request of the European Parliament.

Medical Confidentiality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce regulations or produce guidelines on medical confidentiality covering the subject matter of the draft National Health Service Functions (Preservation of Confidentiality) Regulations 1987; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on Thursday 29 October at column 841.

Doctors

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number and percentage of doctors who drink alcohol while on duty; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of (a) the ethics and (b) the virological dangers of xenotransplantation;

(2) what research has been undertaken into xenotransplantation and the breeding of baboons; and if she will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: Transplanting organs from animals into human beings has been attempted in some countries but not in the United Kingdom. In 1992 two attempts were made in the United States to transplant organs from baboons into human beings, but both human patients died following immunological rejection.

The Department of Health and the Medical Royal Colleges are watching developments and will scrutinise closely any proposed research of this subject. Additionally any proposed research involving national health service patients would have to be referred to the appropriate local research ethics committee.

Neither the Department of Health nor the Medical Research Council has any reports or published evidence of research into xenotransplantation and the breeding of baboons.

Organ transplantation has developed cautiously and responsibly in the United Kingdom. I am confident that this will continue.

Viruses

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what study she has made of (a) Lassa fever, (b) Marbury disease and (c) other illnesses with respect to their possible causation by viruses from a different species.

Mr. Sackville: Many viruses that affect humans have an animal host and are termed zoonoses. Information on the host range comes from regular monitoring of journals and discussions with scientific and medical experts. The results of studies into the causes of Lassa fever and Marburg disease have been published. The Medical Research Council also has a simian virus committee which is attended by a Department of Health observer.

Vitamin Supplements

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the vitamin supplements which are currently widely used to supplement the diets of young babies are available over the counter; and what steps are being taken by her Department to ensure the continued availability of such products in the event of the introduction in the future by the European Commission of a directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Sackville: Vitamin preparations suitable to supplement the diets of young babies are available over the counter. The Government continue to safeguard the nutritional status of young children in income support families by making supplementary vitamins available free under the welfare foods scheme. The EC Commission is now reviewing its work programme and the future of any initiative on dietary supplements will be dependent on that review. The Government's policy remains to strike a balance between ensuring public health and maintaining the availability of safe products for which there is clearly a strong public demand.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by her Department to mothers with young babies about the advisability or otherwise of vitamin supplementation, the range of vitamins which should be used, and the age of the children for whom such supplementation is appropriate.

Mr. Sackville: Expert advice from the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy is that vitamin supplementation of Vitamins A, C. D should be given to infants and young children aged from six months to at least two years and preferably up to five years.

The guidance has been promulaged to health professionals and incorporated in the Health Education Authority booklet "Birth to Five" which is given free to all first-time mothers.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new resources she plans for the west midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1993-94 an additional £53 million has been made available to West Midlands regional health authority in respect of services for its resident population. This is a 1 per cent. increase above inflation once measures on public sector pay restraint have been taken into account. In addition to this amount a further £43 million from centrally held budgets (including AIDS and joint finance) has been issued to West Midlands as part of its initial revenue cash limit. During the course of the year the regional health authority will receive a share of other centrally held budgets including those for general medical services and Project 2000.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of reference for the new chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Donald Wilson, in addition to carrying out all the duties of all regional chairmen, has been asked to:

1. ensure that patients and staff in the West Midlands are properly served by an efficient and effective regional organisation;
2. oversee important management changes proposed in the West Midlands.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the terms agreed for the retirement of Sir James Ackers as chairman of the west midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: With the agreement of the Treasury, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has decided to make a payment of £10,000 to Sir James Ackers under the provisions of paragraph 9(3) of schedule 5 of the National Health Service Act 1977.

Health Districts (Boundaries)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 335, what is her policy on making boundaries of district health and local authorities co-terminous; and how this was applied to her decision to approve the merger of the Kingston/Esher and Richmond/Twickenham/Roehampton health districts.

Dr. Mawhinney: The achievement of common boundaries between local authorities and district health authorities, whilst a highly desirable aid to joint working, is not essential. It is one of the potential benefits which may accrue from DHA mergers, and must be considered in the light of local circumstances.

The merger of Kingston and Esher with Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton was approved for 1 April 1993 to enable the development of a more effective purchasing agency. Further adjustments to boundaries, in order to achieve co-terminosity at this stage, could have delayed the merger. South West Thames RHA now proposes to consult to make the new Kingston and Richmond DHA co-terminous with local authorities by 1 April 1994.

Walsgrave Hospital

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the results of her public consultation exercise carried out recently regarding the trust status of Walsgrave hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: Public consultation on the application for a combined Coventry, Warwickshire and Walsgrave National Health Service Trust was completed on 25 September 1992. Of the 28 responses received, 10 were in support, nine in opposition and nine were neutral. Formal consultation on the dissolution of the Walsgrave NHS Trust involving all staff and staff organisations was completed on 8 January 1993. There was only one response and this expressed satisfaction with the conditions agreed for the transfer.

Specialised Medical Services

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has for ensuring that changes to specialised medical activity will continue to maintain close links with primary and secondary levels of medical care;

(2) what steps she has taken to ensure that the special needs of children in hospital who are suffering from an acute illness or requiring a specialised service should be protected; and what plans she has for an investigation prior to changes arising from the Tomlinson report;

(3) what plans she has to continue funding for the specialised medical services at current levels if they are relocated following the Tomlinson report.

Dr. Mawhinney: We will take account of all relevant factors and announce our proposals for London's health services in the light of the Tomlinson recommendations shortly.

State Registered Nurses

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to increase the numbers of conversion courses for state enrolled nurses and what funding will be made available nationally for this; what are the current numbers of SENs for the current and previous five years; and how many conversion courses were available in each of those years.

Mr. Sackville: It is for regional health authorities, in consultation with employers, to plan for enrolled nurse conversion, now known as level two to level one conversion, as part of their responsibility for identifying the level of demand for qualified nurses and for allocating appropriate budgets.

In addition, we are committed to increasing the number of places available for second level nurses conversion as part of the Project 2000 reforms. An announcement has recently been made concerning additional funding for Project 2000 in 1993-94.

The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has been encouraged to develop flexible options which have made it possible to reduce both the length and cost of conversion courses.

Details of the current numbers of second level nurses for the current year are not yet available. The figures for the previous five years are given in the table. The number of conversion courses available in each of these years is not held centrally by the Department of Health.

East Cumbria Community Health Authority

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the East Cumbria community health council about the chairman of the East Cumbria health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received one letter from the chairman of the East Cumbria community health council. I am satisfied that Mr. Carr should continue to carry out his duties as health authority chairman.

Operating Theatres

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operating theatres in the north-west of England are not operational.

Mr. Sackville: Information about operating theatres is published annually by the Department in "NHS Operating Theatres: Availability and Use: England". A copy of the edition for the year ending 31 March 1991 is available in the Library.

The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bruce Martin, chairman of North Western regional health authority, for further details.

Tobacco Consumption

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the fall in tobacco consumption in the United Kingdom since (a) 1975, (b) 1977, (c) 1989 and (d) 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: Figures on tobacco products for home consumption with necessary duty paid are given below. Comparable figures are not available for earlier years.

Hospitals (Ministerial Visits)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the dates of each ministerial visit to hospitals which has taken place since 25 January or is planned to take place.

Mr. Sackville: The following ministerial visits have been made to hospitals since 25 January:

25 January—Breakspear hospital, Abbots Langley, Herts.
29 January—East Birmingham hospital (Yardley Green health centre).
5 February—Hope hospital, Salford.
11 February—Leicester Royal infirmary.

Further visits are planned.

Wessex RHA

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the recommendations in the District Auditor's report on losses on computer contracts by Wessex regional health authority on which no action has been taken.

Mr. Sackville: The Wessex regional health authority has taken into account all the recommendations of the district auditor set out in paragraph 93 of the report in the public interest published in July 1992; and has referred to Hampshire fraud squad all material on regional information systems plan, including all the information provided in confidence by the district auditor. The only recommendation which has not been implemented is, after reference to independent legal advice, the one regarding the possibility of taking legal action against Arthur Andersen and IBM.

Staff Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total pay bill for (a) managerial staff, (b) administrative and clerical staff, (c) nursing and midwifery staff, (d) medical staff and (e) ancillary staff in each region of the NHS in each year since 1989;

(2) what is the average cost of employing each managerial staff member in the NHS;

(3) what was the total pay bill for (a) managerial staff, (b) administrative and clerical staff, (c) nursing and midwifery staff, (d) medical staff and (e) ancillary staff of the NHS in England in each year since 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Analyses of the annual total salaries and wages costs for hospital and community health services (HCHS) in England are shown in the tables. The figures for 1991-92 are provisional.

The average gross pay costs of employing a whole-time general or senior manager in 1991-92 was approximately £31,000.

(b) Annual census of manpower as at 30 September 1991 (Department of Health).

Notes to the tables:

1. HCHS covers the total expenditure by the health authorities and the national health service trusts including hospital, community health, patient transport (i.e. ambulances), blood transfusion and other services.
2. The figures are for gross pay costs including employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions. Some columns and rows may not add up precisely because of roundings.
3. The figures for "all other staff" include dental, ambulance, maintenance and professional and technical staff together with the total costs of all the categories of non-national health service (agency, etc.) staff.
4. Salaries and wages costs incurred by family health services authorities and special health authorities providing central services to the national health service are excluded.
5. The decrease in nursing and midwifery pay as a proportion of total is partially attributable to senior nurses being regraded to senior manager pay scales.

Radiation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to adopt the recommendations of the International Commission of Radiological Protection on the adoption of a gut uptake factor of 0·001 to be used in radiation dose calculations.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Gut uptake factors used by the authorising Departments (the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution) in radiation dose calculations are based on advice from the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB), which in turn takes account of the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection. Details of NRPB recommended gut uptake factors are published in "Documents of the NRPB" Volume 1, No. 2 (1990), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to take account of the findings of the radiobiology department of St. Bartholomew's hospital medical school, London in relation to the gut uptake factor levels adopted by her Department to calculate radiation dose levels.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The findings referred to have been submitted to MAFF and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in a response to public consultation on proposed new authorisations for the discharge of radioactive wastes from British Nuclear Fuel's Sellafield plant. They will be considered by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for the Environment along with all other responses received in the light of advice from the National Radiological Protection Board.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The number of full-time staff in the market testing unit is currently 15. But a further 175 staff in various other parts of the Department have contributed to the programme, either in the identification of candidates for market testing or in the actual conduct of tests and the activities associated with them. The total cost of this to date is estimated at some £875,000, including external consultancy support.

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he requires the Agricultural Training Board to abide by the procedures set out in general circular 262 of 28 April 1986.

Mr. Curry: Yes.

Mink

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to identify the owners of mink which have escaped from licensed fur farms into the wild.

Mr. Soames: If a mink that is believed to have come from a mink farm is captured, inquiries are made to establish its origin. Should evidence be presented that mink are escaping from a particular farm, Agricultural Development Advisory Service officers will be asked to visit the site to ensure security arrangements are satisfactory.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he has given, following the approval of the Mink Keeping Order 1992, to bring forward proposals requiring animals farmed under licence to be identified by a tattoo or the implanting of a microchip to aid in the identification of animals caught in the wild.

Mr. Soames: None. I have no plans to introduce such a requirement.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (a) the acreage and (b) the percentage of farmland in set-aside in each EC country at 1 January; and what are the estimated equivalent figures for 1 January 1994.

Mr. Curry: The latest available information on land set-aside under the five-year set-aside scheme in each EC country is set out in table I. Information on the area of land set aside this year under the new arable area payments scheme will not be available until growers have to declare the area later this year. Table II contains estimates of the area which might be set aside under the new scheme, derived from budgetary estimates of expenditure on the CAP reform package prepared by the Commission last year. There is no reason to expect that the area set aside in 1994 will be significantly different from that in 1993.

Chlorpropham

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what publicly funded toxology tests on CIPC have been carried out in the United Kingdom; and what notification he has had of toxology tests on CIPC carried out in the United Kingdom by companies.

Mr. Soames: No publicly funded toxicology tests on CIPC, also known as chlorpropham, have been carried out in the United Kingdom. It is the rule that an applicant for approval of a pesticide product is responsible for carrying out the necessary toxicology tests.

Reports of toxicity tests performed in the United Kingdom on formulations containing CIPC have been submitted as part of a number of approvals for products containing CIPC. But the majority of studies submitted on the toxicology of CIPC are based on work performed in Europe, north America and Japan.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of whether the chemical CIPC is suitable for use in crisp manufacturing.

Mr. Soames: There is evidence that CIPC, also known as chlorpropham, is effective as a means of preventing sprouting of potatoes in store, and so helping to ensure a year-round supply of potatoes suitable for crisp manufacture. The EC pesticide review programme will in due course consider all aspects of the approval of CIPC, including its effectiveness and its toxicology.

Following recommendations from the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides, an average daily intake figure of 0·1 mg per kilogram body weight per day for CIPC has provisionally been set for consumer risk assessment purposes. Residues of CIPC found in total diet studies indicate that CIPC presents no risk to health.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 9 and 10 February.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Agriculture Council which started on 9 February and, after a suspension, finished in the early hours of Saturday 13 February.

The most difficult item was concerned with bananas, where the Council had before it a text which put into legal form the political agreement on a Community regime agreed at the December Council. That agreement fully protected United Kingdom interests and our traditional suppliers in the Caribbean and was therefore highly satisfactory for Her Majesty's Government.

Unfortunately, two delegations refused to confirm their earlier positive votes and opposed the adoption of the legal text. They sustained this position through many difficult hours of negotiation. Eventually matters were resolved, and the text adopted, because two other delegations, which had previously opposed the agreement, including the Danish delegation now in the chair, voted in favour so that the necessary qualified majority could be found. By this means the Danish presidency in particular ensured the maintenance of that integrity of Council decisions without which the Community could not function effectively. It is most unfortunate that two delegations changed their votes in this way. Such an attitude can only make future negotiations in the Council more difficult. However, on the substance, as indicated above, the regulation is a very satisfactory one for the United Kingdom.

The Council also had a first discussion of the 1993 farm price proposals. I regretted that these do not include reforms of those sectors such as sugar, wine, olive oil and fruit and vegetables where this is still outstanding.

In conclusion with the Commission in the margins of the Council, I was able to confirm that the supplementary ewe premium for flocks in our less favoured areas should be paid at the green rate applicable on 3 January. This means that this year United Kingdom producers will receive some £10·4 million more than previously expected.

This was not an easy Council, but the outcome was a good one for the United Kingdom.

Sheep Dips

Ms. Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports or information his Department has received concerning links between exposure to organo-phosphate sheep dips and chronic illness.

Mr. Soames: The veterinary medicines directorate operates a suspected adverse reaction reporting scheme for all veterinary medicines, including sheep dips. All reports are fully investigated. The results of those involving humans are assessed by an appraisal panel of Government doctors and scientists who evaluate potential links between human health and exposure to organophosphate sheep dips, before consideration by the Veterinary Products Committee, an independent scientific advisory committee.

In addition, a project to investigate possible chronic effects on farmers of occupational exposure to organophosphate dips is currently being carried out by the institute of occupational health at Birmingham university.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice is currently given by his Department to people in the use of organo-phosphate sheep dip.

Mr. Soames: The manufacturers of all licensed organophosphate sheep dips are required, as a condition of approval, to provide advice to users via product labels and product literature on the safe use of these products, including the need for protective clothing. Further advice is contained in the free leaflet "The Safe Handling and Disposal of Sheep Dips" published by the veterinary medicines directorate which has been distributed to all sheep farmers in England and Wales.

It is important that this advice is carefully followed by those using these products.

Young Farmers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of people employed in agriculture are under 30 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The results of the 1990 EC structure survey show that in England about 20 per cent. of people employed in agriculture are under 30 years of age. This includes farmers, working spouses and regularly employed workers. The survey is based on a sample covering approximately one quarter of all main holdings in England and is therefore subject to sampling error.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans there are to increase the number of young people entering farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The numbers of those becoming working farmers is entirely a matter for individual choice in response to personal circumstances and market forces.

Drainage Authorities

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what guidance is given to drainage authorities when they give information on the value for money and economic efficiency of the maintenance works that they carry out to interested parties;

(2) what rules drainage authorities follow upon the disclosures to interested parties of the investment appraisal submitted to his Department when seeking grant-aid; and if he will extend the depth and quality of information made available to interested parties.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry encourages authorities to make aggregated results of appraisals of grant-aided flood defence works available to interested parties on request. Such works can include not only new construction and improvements, but also major repairs. Guidance on the form in which the information should be presented was set out in a Ministry paper on investment appraisal issued to drainage authorities in 1985, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House at the time. The Ministry plans to publish revised and updated project appraisal guidelines next month. Separately, consideration is being given to whether guidance on the provision of results of appraisals to interested parties should be revised.

There is no separate Ministry guidance on the economic appraisal by authorities of their own maintenance work.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the number of sheep affected by sheep scab, by county and divided into less favoured areas and non less favoured areas in each month from October 1991 to the last month for which figures are available;

(2) if he will list the number of outbreaks of sheep scab, by county, by flock and divided into less favoured areas and non less favoured areas in each month from October 1991 to the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: The table below lists the number of recorded outbreaks on a flock basis by county for the months October 1991 to May 1992, which is the last month for which figures are available. The remaining information is either unavailable or could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if all vehicles used by teams trapping badgers under the bovine tuberculosis control policy carry his Ministry's markings; and whether personnel involved carry identification identifying themselves and giving them authority for their work at all times.

Mr. Soames: Ministry vehicles used in bovine TB control operations do not carry Ministry markings. All Ministry personnel are issued with identification cards bearing their photograph and written authority to carry out their official duties.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the culling of badgers under the bovine tuberculosis control policy has been contracted out.

Mr. Soames: No.

Training Board (Wales)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the future of the Agricultural Training Board in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: In response to the consultation document on the future status and operation of the Agricultural Training Board issued on 25 September 1992, representations were received from 80 organisations and individuals in Wales. Ministers expect to be in a position to make a statement on the future of the board later this month.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels were recorded in International Council for the Exploration of the Seas areas (a) vii(a), (b) vii(f) and (c) vii(g) in each month during each year since 1986.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 11 February 1993]: The information requested is set out for numbers of individual vessels recorded during routine fishery surveillance within British fishery limits in the ICES areas stated. Surveillance is not continuous, so the figures do not represent total numbers of boats fishing the areas in question. Over the period, surveillance effort in ICES area VII has increased. This, together with an improvement in the quality of surveillance data, contributes to the increased numbers of vessels reported in more recent years.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

9. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the administration of claims for disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: Introducing disability living allowance at a stroke was always going to be a difficult task. But since April 1992, the Benefits Agency has received over 1·25 million claims to disability living allowance and attendance allowance. Almost 1·2 million of these have been cleared and over 800,000 awards of benefit have been made.

17. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce any initiatives to speed the delivery of the disability living allowance to recipients.

Mr. Scott: The Benefits Agency, which is responsible for the administration of disability living allowance, is reviewing the procedures for processing claims, setting up additional processing centres and increasing the training of staff.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to complete the review of the disability living allowance care component for Mr. Trevor Fowler, applied for on 22 October 1992.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Bob Cryer, dated 12 February 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about Mr. Trevor Fowler's application for review of the Disability Living Allowance (DLA) care component made on 22 October 1992.

I am pleased to tell you that the outstanding action was completed on Mr. Fowler's case on 10 February 1993 and the Disability Living Allowance Unit (DLAU) have already written to you separately and in greater detail about this.

The delay has resulted from the heavy volumes of work following the successful launch of the new benefit. Latterly delays were due to the backlog of reviews which had been building up. You will be aware from my letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs of the problems the Benefits Agency has faced since the launch of DLA and the positive steps I have taken to improve the situation. Further steps taken to recruit additional, and redeploy existing, staff to clear the backlog of reviews.

I am sorry for the delay in dealing with Mr. Fowler's case. Mr. Fowler has clearly not received the standard of service to which he is entitled from the Agency. Such matters are not taken lightly when they fail to come up to the standard of service the Benefits Agency is trying to give all its customers and I offer my sincere apologies to Mr. Fowler for any distress and inconvenience caused by the delays.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

European Court of Justice

13. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recent cases in the European Court of Justice have been won by his Department.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on 23 November 1992, at column 532.

Independent Living Fund

14. Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of extending the replacement fund for the independent living fund to cover people over retirement age.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 11 December 1992, at column 153.

Mortgage Interest

15. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to a scheme to enable unemployed households in receipt of income support covering mortgage interest payments to take up job opportunities that may be available to them.

Mr. Burt: We have considered carefully the proposals which have been made to pay mortgage interest for those in work. We have no plans for such a scheme.

Homelessness

16. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what studies his Department has made of the impact of the present benefit arrangements for 16 and 17-year-olds on homelessness among that age group.

Mr. Burt: The benefit arrangements for 16 and 17-year-olds are, like those of other recipients, kept under review. The Department of Employment guarantees a youth training place to all 16 and 17-year-olds who want one. Income support is not generally payable as youth training allowances are usually more generous. Income support is available to others who are vulnerable, either because they fulfil particular criteria, or by way of the severe hardship provision.

Pension Age

18. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made on equalising the pension age, and introducing flexible retirement for men and women.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are committed to the equalisation of state pension age. No decisions have been taken as to what option should be adopted but we shall be announcing our proposals for equalisation in due course following full consideration of the views both the public and interested organisations have expressed.

Housing Benefit (Lodgers)

19. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to change housing benefit entitlement to include lodgers who are close relatives.

Mr. Burt: Housing benefit is payable only in respect of a commercial rent liability. Most people living with close relatives do not have a rent liability, but instead make contributions to the household's costs. It has never been the Government's intention that housing benefit should be payable for such contributions.

Pensions

20. Mr. Legg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of his Department's policies to encourage personal pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: The success of the Government's policy in encouraging personal pensions is amply demonstrated by the fact that 5 million people are currently personal pension holders.

22. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures his Department is planning to encourage personal choice in pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are committed to encouraging choice and flexibility in pension provision. We have introduced measures to ensure that individuals are able to obtain the information they need to make informed choices, and we are considering whether more can be done in this area. It is clear that individuals wish to take advantage of the choices available to make provision for their own retirement—5 million people have used personal pensions to contract out of the state earnings-related pension scheme since we introduced the option in 1988.

Care Allowances

21. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women are in receipt of mobility care allowance; and what was the comparable figure in 1978-79.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of people in receipt of the carer premium as a percentage of those who are eligible.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the information given in my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 25 January 1993, at columns 585-86.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, how much his Department spends on invalid care allowance and the carer premium; and what percentage of the total social security budget this figure makes up.

Mr. Scott: Pursuant to my reply of 25 January at column 583, the percentage of the total social security budget spent on invalid care allowance and the carer premium in 1991-92 was 0·4 per cent.

Means Testing and Private Pensions

24. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about proposals to means test universal benefits and about his policies towards private pensions provision; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: From time to time we receive representations relating to various aspects of the Government's benefits and pensions policies. These cover a wide range of topics and include suggestions for changes in the current schemes.

Pensioners

25. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the percentage of pensioners retiring (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available, who had incomes from savings; and what was the real average level of savings on each of those two dates.

Miss Widdecombe: My ministerial colleagues and I receive representations from many people about pensioner issues. I am able to inform them that 68 per cent. of pensioners who had recently retired in 1979 had income from savings, rising to 78 per cent. by 1988. The average income from savings of all recently retired pensioners, at 1988 prices, was £12 per week in 1979 and £26·30 in 1988. Reliable information on the level of savings is not available in the form requested.

Source: Family Expenditure Survey.

Pensions (Married Women)

26. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which EC countries provide a separate pension to married women who have never made their own contributions towards a pension.

Miss Widdecombe: The United Kingdom is the only country in the Community to pay a separate pension to a pensioner's wife in her own right on the strength of her husband's contributions. However, Denmark and the Netherlands also pay a pension to a wife on the basis of residence.

Disability

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures his Department has taken to maintain support for disabled people.

Mr. Scott: Since 1979 we have introduced a wide range of improvements, aimed at providing a wide ranging and coherent system of disability benefits. These improvements culminated in the introduction of disability living allowance and disability working allowance in April last year.

By the end of 1992-93, we expect expenditure on benefit for long-term sick and disabled people to have risen by more than 170 per cent. in real terms to £13·7 billion.

Income Support

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently estimated to be receiving income support; what is the total cost to the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: It is estimated that for 1992-93 there are 5·3 million claims for income support at a total benefit cost of £14·5 billion. This level of expenditure demonstrates our commitment to protect those on a low income.

Housing Benefit, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much refund of housing benefit was paid to Lambeth council in each of the 12 months of 1992.

Mr. Burt: Monthly payments on account of housing benefit subsidy made to Lambeth council in 1992 are shown in the table.

Month (1992)	Rent Allowances[1] £	Rent Rebates (Non-HRA)[1] £	Rent Rebates (HRA)[2] £	Total £

Notes:

[1] paid by the Department of Social Security

[2] paid by the Department of the Environment

[3] negative amounts, due to recovery from 1991-92

In addition, the Department paid £110,361 to Lambeth council in 1992 in respect of the direct administration subsidy for housing benefit. The monthly profile of this subsidy was as follows:

January	36,787
February	36,787
March	36,787
April	79,179
May	79,179
June	79,179

August	79,179
September	79,179
October	79,179
November	79,179
December	79,179
Total	110,361

The above table shows administration subsidy payments on account made by DSS. Administration subsidy for housing benefit is paid in two parts: 50 per cent. direct grant from DSS and 50 per cent. through the revenue support grant.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to respond to the application by Mr. Stanley Vauvert for mobility allowance, sent on 13 July 1992.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Bob Cryer, dated 12 February 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about Mr. Stanley Vauvert's application for review made on 13 July 1992 of the decision to disallow his Mobility Allowance claim.

I am pleased to tell you that a decision was made on Mr. Vauvert's application on the 10 February 1993 and the Disability Living Allowance Unit have already replied to you separately and in greater detail about this.

I am concerned about the delay in the handling of Mr. Vauvert's review application. You will be aware from my letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs of the problems the Benefits Agency (BA) has faced since the launch of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and the positive steps I have taken to improve the situation. Since then further steps have been taken to recruit additional, of and redeploy existing staff to clear the backlog of reviews by, amongst other things, the setting up of four additional processing units.

Mr. Vauvert has clearly not received the standard of service which he has every right to expect from the Agency and I offer my sincere apologies to him for any distress and inconvenience caused by the delays.

I hope that you find this reply helpful and I thank you for the opportunity to explain this matter. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Policy

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to delay the MPG 3 review until after the House has debated the recommendations in the first report from the Trade and Industry Select Committee 1992-93 (HC 237) on British energy policy and the market for coal, in so far as they relate to open cast coal mining.

Mr. Baldry: My Department intends to issue draft revised guidance for public consultation as soon as possible following the outcome of the coal review. We shall give careful consideration to the recommendations of the Trade and Industry Select Committee in preparing the draft guidelines and before the guidelines are finalised we will take into account the outcome of debates and all other representations we receive during the public consultation period.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: None of the projects in my Department's market testing programme which involves exposing in-house functions to competition has yet reached the stage where a contract or service level agreement has been awarded.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: There are six staff in my Department directly assigned to the market testing programme.

From November 1991 to end December 1992, the total cost of the programme amounted to £650,480.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the compliance of the current application by British Nuclear Fuels for a revision of its authorisation to discharge radioactive waste from its Sellafield site with clauses on the justification of the production of radioactive waste within the 1986 White Paper on radioactive waste.

Mr. Maclean: This is a matter for the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who have recently completed the statutory public consultation exercise into BNFL's applications. Following consideration of the numerous responses received by HMIP, they will be submitting their consultation response document to the Secretary of State and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for consideration.

Noise Monitoring

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken by his Department towards developing a co-ordinated noise level monitoring database for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: None. However, we have recently completed the national noise incidence study which involved noise measurements being made outside 1,000 homes in England and Wales during 1990 and has provided a benchmark on how noisy the country is. The results of the study will be published later this year.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant, Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the consultation exercise conducted by the inspectorate on British Nuclear Fuels' application for discharge authorisations for the thermal oxide reprocessing plant and associated plants.

Mr. Maclean: HMIP and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food currently expect to submit their report on the consultation exercise by the beginning of April 1993.

Landfill Gas Flares

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about air pollution from landfill gas flares; what techniques are available to reduce emissions; and whether he will make gas flares subject to local authority air pollution control.

Mr. Maclean: Flaring of landfill gas serves to destroy the flammable components of the inlet landfill gas and reduce the trace components which are responsible for odour problems. Carbon dioxide would constitute the bulk component of flared gas since methane is a flammable gas. However, in order to have a better understanding of emissions from flare systems, my Department has commissioned the Environmental Safety centre at Harwell laboratory to carry out research on the fate of landfill gas components when flared, to compare the potential environmental impact of both source and flared landfill gas, and provide technical recommendations on the key design factors in flare systems to ensure complete combustion. The final report is expected this year.

Pollution control legislation applies through the provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 under which a landfill site requires to be licensed before operations can commence. The most recent advice on appropriate requirements for flare stacks is contained in chapter 8 of the Department's "Waste Management Paper No. 27". Since emissions are controlled through the waste disposal licence, it is not necessary for flares to be additionally controlled under the air pollution legislation.

EC Environmental Action Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resource commitment was agreed by the Council of Ministers in support of the European Commission's fifth environmental action programme.

Mr. Maclean: The Council has agreed a commitment of 13 million ecu (£10·4 million) to support environmental action including the fifth action programme.

Methane Emissions

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion, in carbon dioxide equivalent, of the United Kingdom's contribution to global greenhouse gas emissions arises from methane emissions; and whether he plans to introduce a strategy to reduce emissions of methane gas.

Mr. Maclean: The most recent edition of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" estimates United Kingdom methane emissions in 1990 at 4·371 million tonnes. The direct global warming effect of these emissions is estimated at around 7 per cent. of that of United Kingdom emissions of carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxide. Indirect effects add to methane's relative contribution; the intergovernmental panel on climate change estimates that these could be of similar magnitude to the direct effect. The estimate of United Kingdom methane emissions is currently under review.

The UN framework convention on climate change requires developed country parties to draw up a programme of measures aimed at returning emissions of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases, including methane, to their 1990 levels by 2000. We are aiming to produce the United Kingdom's first national programme under the convention by the end of this year.

Emissions

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he expects the introduction of new vehicle emission standards to influence emissions of oxides of nitrogen from road vehicles over the next 30 years; and what projections he has commissioned to demonstrate the possible effects.

Mr. Maclean: The introduction of three-way catalytic converters, now required on all new petrol-engined cars, should lead to a significant decrease in NOx emissions over the next 10 years.

Projections by Warren Spring laboratory to 2010 were published in September 1992 in the report "Pollution in the Atmosphere: Future Emissions from the UK". I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House. They suggest a fall in NOx emissions from road transport of between 30 per cent. and 36 per cent. by 2010 compared with 1991.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the total estimated emissions of oxides of nitrogen in the United Kingdom in each year since 1980.

Mr. Maclean: Estimated emissions of oxides of nitrogen (NO_x) in the United Kingdom since 1980, as reported in my Department's 1991 Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics, and are as follows:

	NO_x Emission (thousands tonnes)
1980	2,312
1981	2,242
1982	2,221
1983	2,234
1984	2,216
1985	2,327
1986	2,416
1987	2,544
1988	2,626
1989	2,717
1990	2,729

Eco-labelling

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those EC member states that have indicated they will continue with national eco-labelling.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that France, Germany and the Netherlands are currently continuing with national eco-labelling schemes.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those environmental organisations that have been involved in eco-labelling consultation;

(2) what percentage of the market will be required for qualification in each of the markets under consideration by the United Kingdom Eco-Labelling Board; and if he will list them;

(3) if he will include in the environmental impact statement for eco-labelling of product contents the effect of sourcing of ingredients on third world cultures and ecosystems as well as the presence of volatile organic compounds;

(4) what studies he has made of the different energy mixes used in manufacturing throughout the European Community when developing eco-label criteria for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom Eco-Labelling Board has been established to administer and promote the European Community eco-labelling scheme nationally and has responsibility for dealing with the operational aspects of the scheme. I have therefore asked the board to reply to my hon. Friend direct.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps is taking to encourage the European Commission to issue clear guidelines on eco-labelling.

Mr. Maclean: We have consistently pressed the European Commission to implement the scheme as quickly as possible and to issue whatever guidance may be required.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the effectiveness of eco-labelling as opposed to fiscal measures on (a) energy use sources, (b) waste disposal, (c) incentives for energy efficiency, (d) tax breaks for recycling or re-use or (e) tax breaks for clean of non-renewable technology.

Mr. Maclean: The eco-labelling scheme aims to create a market advantage for manufactures and retailers who make and stock greener products. The scheme is a European Community commitment and it is complementary to any fiscal measures which might be taken in particular sectors.

Press Releases

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in order all his Department's press releases since 1 September 1992.

Mr Howard: Monthly summaries of this Department's press releases for the period 1 September 1992 to 31 January 1993 have been placed in the Library.

Housing

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent talks he has had with financial institutions about their potential involvement in the private rented sector in housing.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend, the Minister for Housing and Planning, has had a series of meetings with financial institutions to discuss a wide range of issues, including the potential for their involvement in the private rented housing sector to a greater degree than at present. We envisage that these will continue.

Aggregates

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish in full his Department's revised approach to sand and gravel extraction in England and Wales.

Sir George Young: The Department has published revised planning guidelines for aggregates provision in England and Wales for public consultation. The consultation period ends on 31 March and the guidelines will be published once the public response has been assessed.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out by his Department into the use of recycled material as an alternative to aggregate extraction; what other examination his Department has made of ways of reducing the demand for aggregates in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has commissioned a number of studies into ways of achieving more efficient use of aggregates, including research into the occurrence and utilisation of mineral and construction wastes. No research has been undertaken into reducing directly the demand for aggregates, which is a reflection of the demands made by society on the construction industry.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigation he plans to carry out into the comparative environmental problems and benefits between developing coastal superquarries and inland sources of aggregates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Regional commentaries produced by the regional aggregates working parties indicate that traditional sources of primary aggregates will not be able to meet all anticipated demand over the next 20 years without some unacceptable environmental implications. My Department is therefore considering a range of options for meeting future demand. Any proposals for the development of coastal superquarries will be assessed on their merits and full regard will be had to their possible environmental impact.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the figures for the consumption of the different types of aggregates including crushed rock, sand and gravel, marine dredged sand and gravel, secondary aggregates and recycled materials, as used by different industries in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The proportions of the total consumption of primary aggregates (sand and gravel and crushed rock) accounted for by particular sectors of the construction industry in England and Wales in 1990 have been estimated by ECOTEC Research and Consulting Ltd. as:

	Per cent.
Housing	20
Roads (including Bridges)	24
Private Industrial	11
Private Commercial	12
Other Public	13
Road Repair and Maintenance	8
Housing Repair and Maintenance	8
Other	3

No detailed statistics are available on the use of different types of aggregates by these separate sectors.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what expertise exists in the national co-ordinating group and each of the regional aggregates working parties to assess the potential for synthetic and waste materials as alternatives to aggregates; what consultations each of these bodies has with environmental and other interests in carrying out their duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: These groups possess no specific expertise on secondary and waste materials for aggregates use. In addition to these groups, however, the Department also receives advice from consultants and the appropriate trade associations. Consultations have also taken place with environmental and other interests on the regional commentaries produced by the regional aggregates working parties and my Department has taken the responses into consideration in the revised guidelines for aggregates provision which have been published for consultation.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much (a) crushed rock, (b) sand and gravel, (c) marine dredged sand and gravel, (d) secondary aggregates and (e) recycled materials have been (i) imported into the United Kingdom and (ii) exported from the United Kingdom for 1985 until the latest available date; if he will list the countries involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Very little crushed rock, land-won sand and gravel or secondary and recycled aggregates have been imported or exported to or from the United Kingdom since 1985. Total exports and imports of these aggregates are estimated to account for les than 1 per cent. of total United Kingdom aggregates production and consumption.

Marine sand and gravel dredged in United Kingdom waters is landed in some other European countries, principally Holland, Belgium and France. Foreign landings of marine dredged sand and gravel since 1985 are:

	Tonnes
1985	2,495,000
1986	2,317,000
1987	2,564,000
1988	2,379,000
1989	2,590,000
1990	3,818,000
1991	4,614,000

FC Initiatives

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further allocations of funding are available to the United Kingdom from the European social fund and the European regional development fund for initiatives which are the responsibility of his Department, as a result of the fall in the exchange rate.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry.

Derelict Land

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are being made available for derelict land reclamation under the derelict land grant programme in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The resources available in 1993-94 for derelict land reclamation under the derelict land grant programme will be £103·5 million.

The reclamation of derelict and often seriously contaminated land plays a vital role in regenerating run down urban areas and improving the environment. In the last five years DLG has funded the reclamation of more than 6,000 hectares (14,820 acres) of derelict land, and more than, 1,500 hectares of land are now reclaimed annually.

DLG is available throughout England, but in practice the largest allocations go to the north west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions where some of the most extensive dereliction is found; and to the west midlands where funding is needed for continued investigative and remedial work on old limestone workings in the black country.

A large proportion of the DLG programme will be devoted to 25 rolling programmes of reclamation, which will receive £45 million in 1993-94.

Reclamation in areas subject to colliery closures is an important priority. DLG is being used in these areas mainly to reclaim collieries closed before March 1990: British Coal has agreed to take financial responsibility for the reclamation of most collieries closing since then. In 1993-94, £19 million of DLG will be devoted to treating dereliction arising from coal mining.

The Government's continued high level of commitment to the clearance of dereliction will ensure that momentum is not lost in the handover to the urban regeneration agency. The agency will have a wide range of powers to deal with derelict, vacant and underused land either itself or in cooperation with local authorities and the private and voluntary sectors.

Earth Summit

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Population Concern, the International Planned Parenthood Federation and Marie Stopes International have been invited to take part in the discussions on the practical implementation of the Earth Summit agreements at the International Conference for Non-Governmental Organisations in Manchester in September.

Mr. Maclean: We have consulted on proposals to hold an international conference in September on the theme of partnerships for change. We are considering responses to our consultation note. When we issue invitations to attend, we shall bear in mind the interest of people engaged in the population issues.

Urban Waste Water

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites proposed to him for classification as sensitive areas under the EC directive on urban waste water treatment, including the proposing body, by reason of (a) eutrophication and (b) inland water with a nitrate concentration greater than 50 mg/l.

Mr. Maclean: The urban waste water treatment directive requires member states to identify sensitive areas, in accordance with the criteria set out in the directive, by 31 December this year. The National Rivers Authority is at present compiling final lists of "candidate" sensitive areas which it will submit to the Department for consideration. Similar exercises are being carried out in the remainder of the United Kingdom. An announcement about the location of the areas to be formally identified as sensitive will be made before the deadline imposed in the directive.

Protection Regulations

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the regulations protecting the environment which he proposes to take steps to rescind.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend is currently reviewing all regulations protecting the environment to ensure that they are necessary, and that they are meeting their objectives in the most efficient way possible with the minimum burden on industry.

Civil Servants (Bicycles)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current conditions on which civil servants in his Department are granted salary advances to enable the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel; if he will make a statement on the current conditions in each agency of his Department; what plans he has to change the conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 18 January 1993]: Neither my Department not its agencies currently have a scheme for granting salary advances for the purchase of bicycles. However, my Department is currently reviewing the exisitng facilities for staff who cycle to work.

Abandoned Mines (Water Pollution)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete his consideration of the framework of responsibility for water pollution from abandoned mines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 10 February 1993]: We aim to reach conclusions later this year.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to protect sites of special scientific interest and other environmentally important areas from the effects of oil spillages.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 February 1993]: In advance of any recommendations arising from the Marine Accident Investigation Branch investigation into the Shetland tanker incident or from the inquiry conducted by Lord Donaldson on the measures necessary to protect the United Kingdom coastline from pollution from merchant shipping, I draw the hon. Member's attention to the agreement reached by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport with tanker operators to avoid a number of sensitive areas.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances his Department is required to grant permission before sulphur can be added to coal used in coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 9 February 1993]: There is no record of sulphur being added to coal used in power stations. However, in appropriate circumstances, traces of sulphur trioxide may be added to the flue gases to provide a very great improvement in the removal of particulate matter in an electrostatic precipitator. The sulphur trioxide has little environmental significance in the quantities used. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution would require notification before the use of sulphur trioxide began at a power station.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Georgia

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to collect payment from ex-Soviet fishing operations off South Georgia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands are actively pursuing, with some success, debts owed by vessel owners for the transhipment of their catches off South Georgia. The majority of outstanding debts are owed by vessels of the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many landings have occurred in prohibited areas by tourists in South Georgia over the last two years.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There was one unsubstantiated report during 1992 that a cruise vessel had landed passengers in a prohibited area.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the sources of income for South Georgia for the last three years.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The main sources of income over the last three years have been transhipment fees paid by fishing vessels, port and harbour dues, investment income, money from the sale of stamps and income from tourist charges.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has had about the need for a tourism management plan for South Georgia;

(2) if he will list the detailed requirements for a South Georgia management plan;

(3) when he expects to publish a management plan for South Georgia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are studying the case for commissioning a detailed management plan for South Georgia and have received representations about the introduction of such a plan from various interested individuals and groups. Any plan would need to cover a range of issues, including the impact of tourism on the environment of South Georgia. In the light of advice from our environmental advisers we shall examine whether existing legislation should be updated and any further measures which may be necessary.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to introduce a charge for tourist visits to South Georgia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: During 1992, a charge of US$50 per head was introduced for all tourists visiting South Georgia.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to apply for a world heritage listing for South Georgia; and if he will list the advantages and disadvantages of obtaining a world heritage listing for South Georgia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The World Conservation Union is considering which sub-antarctic islands meet the criteria for world heritage listing. We will examine the case for the listing of South Georgia in the light of their recommendations.

Antarctica

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the reasons why the United Kingdom has delayed the extension of maritime zones in Antarctica.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The sea areas around the British Antarctic Territory are included within the scope of Antarctic treaty instruments to which the United Kingdom is a party. These instruments provide a legal regime for sustainable and non-sustainable resources. We see no advantage in extending maritime zones.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his officials have made of the Macquarie island plan.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have studied the Macquarie island nature reserve management plan of 1991 prepared by the Tasmanian Government's department of Parks, Wildlife and Heritage. This provides a prescriptive framework which takes account of the conservation and management needs of that island.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to extend the maritime zones of the South Sandwich islands, the South Orkney islands, South Georgia, Gough islands and Shag rocks.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A fisheries zone of 200 nautical miles has already been created around Gough island as part of the Tristan da Cunha island group. The territorial sea around South Georgia, which includes Shag rocks, and the South Sandwich islands was extended to 12 miles in 1989. The situation is kept under review. There are no plans to extend maritime zones off the British Antarctic Territory which includes the South Orkney islands.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list those Antarctic islands together with their parent country that have had their maritime zones extended; and from what date this took effect in each case;

(2) if he will list those Antarctic islands and their parent country that have not had their maritime zones extended.

Mr. Garel-Jones: On the basis of the published information available, it appears that the islands within the Antarctic treaty area and the following sub-Antarctic islands have the fishery zones or economic zones which are listed in the table, with effective dates indicated where available.

Island	Nationality	Zone	Effective date
Heard Island	Australia	200 mile fishing zone	1979
McDonald Island			1979
Macquaire Island			1979
Auckland Island	New Zealand	200 mile economic zone	1977
Campbell Island			1977
Prince Edward Island	Republic of South Africa		1977
Marion Island			1977
Crozet Island	France		1978
Kerguelan Island			1978
Amsterdam Island			1978
Saint Paul Island			1978

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd The following number of statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the years 1980 to 1992:

	Number
1980	30
1981	45
1982	22
1983	21
1984	22
1985	28
1986	20
1987	27
1988	31
1989	24
1990	24
1991	10
1992	23

Island Groups

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies he has made of the management plans for the Campbell and Snare island groups; and what input his officials have had into the plans for the Antipodes and Bounty island group.

Mr. Garel-Jones We have not received copies of the management plans for the Campbell and Snares island groups and have not been asked to comment on the plans for the Antipodes and Bounty island group.

Diplomatic Service

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning the recent decision by the diplomatic service to reduce the number of Rolls-Royce motor cars; and why this decision was taken.

Mr. Goodlad: A number of representations have been received since the decision was taken in 1990 to reduce the number of Rolls-Royce cars used in diplomatic posts overseas. The most recent of these approaches have been from my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mr. Mills) and from Mr. Nigel Cornelius, director of UK and Pacific operations Rolls-Royce Motor Company Ltd.

The decision was taken in the context of tightening financial constraints which made it necessary to make substantial savings in the provision of vehicles for overseas posts.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Rolls-Royce motor cars are currently owned and used by the diplomatic service overseas, and at which embassies, consulates and other units.

Mr. Goodlad: The diplomatic service at present owns and uses eight Rolls-Royce motor cars. These are in the following overseas posts.

Bonn
Canberra
Moscow
Paris
Pretoria
Riyadh
Tokyo
and Washington

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Overseas Affairs if he will make a statement of his policy on (a) providing assistance with the promotion of the products of United Kingdom manufacturers through the diplomatic service and (b) the criterion by which value for money in diplomatic service purchasing policy is assessed.

Mr. Goodlad: The promotion of Britain's economic interests overseas, including visible and invisible exports, is one of the basic aims of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. A variety of services is provided by our overseas posts and the Department of Trade and Industry for exporters of British goods and services.

In accordance with Government guidelines, the purchasing policy of the FCO is based on obtaining value for money through competition. British suppliers are used where they are competitive on quality, price and delivery.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with other members of the UN Security Council and EC member states about sanctions against the former Yugoslavia; what decision has been taken as to the circumstances in which sanctions might be applied to Croatia; what assessment he has made of whether Russia will continue to support sanctions against Serbia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in close contact with our European partners and members of the United Nations Security Council on this issue. No decision has been taken on what circumstances would require sanctions against Croatia. Russia has repeatedly made clear its full support for the enforcement of sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro.

The Edinburgh European Council made clear that unless there were a radical change of policy in Belgrade, and genuine co-operation with the peace process, the international community would continue to take stern action against the authorities there, isolating Serbia for a long time to come.

Visas

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the number of appeals in each of the last five years against refusal of visitor's visas to people visting the United Kingdom in order to visit relations or friends in Walthamstow; and how many were successful.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not centrally recorded and could not be provided except at disproportionate expense.

Serbia

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many identified detention centres have been set up by the Serbian administration; and what evidence he has of the prevailing conditions and the welfare of the prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The International Committee of the Red Cross has not been able to identify any detention camps set up by the Serbian administration. The ICRC has, however, identified five detention camps in Bosnia administered by Bosnian Serb authorities. It has access to all five.

Foreign Policy

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department last conducted a general review of British foreign policy; and what were its conclusions.

Mr. Hurd: My Department keeps British foreign policy under almost constant review, adapting policies and redeploying resources whenever necessary. The FCO departmental report, which describes recent developments and future priorities, was published on 10 February. I have agreed with the Chancellor of the Exchequer that during this year we shall be studying ways in which this country's diplomatic and related work overseas can be enhanced.

Diplomatic Missions

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals exist to close British diplomatic missions over the next 10-year period; in which countries these missions are scheduled for closure; and with what savings proportionate to his Department's total budget.

Mr. Goodlad: We are studying carefully a range of options for reducing expenditure in line with the public expenditure plans announced in the 1992 autumn statement. No decisions have yet been taken.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the Government are giving to the Falkland Islands Government, GECO-PRAKLA and Spectrum to explore and survey for hydrocarbons in the waters around the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs approved the issue of licences to both companies to enable them to carry out seismic surveys in the Falkland Islands designated area. Surveying has begun.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the statement made by the Governor of the Falkland Islands to the executive council on 23 December 1992, with regard to seismic licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Meetings of the Falklands executive council are confidential.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he has done to counter the claims made by the Argentine Government over waters currently the subject of seismic licences held by GECO-PRAKLA and Spectrum to survey for hydrocarbons, since the granting of those licences.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Argentines are well aware of our position regarding the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands and their surrounding maritime areas. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. and noble Friend the Baroness Chalker of Wallasey in another place regarding our sovereignty of the Falkland Islands:

> "Sovereignty is not for negotiation. I cannot underline that too strongly".—[Official Report, House of Lords, 1 February 1993; Vol. 542, c. 8-9.]

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will issue a letter of comfort on behalf of the British Government to enable the oil industry to further explore for hydrocarbons in the waters around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given in reply to a question by the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 10 February 1993, Official Report, column 681.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the Argentine Government, during his last visit to the Argentine, in respect of (a) the Falkland Islands continental shelf, (b) the exploration for hydrocarbons in the waters of the Falkland Islands and (c) the entry of the Argentine into the squid licensing market in waters around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Garel-Jones: During the visit of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to Argentina in January, he made clear to Foreign Minister di Tella our concerns about the potential over-fishing of the vulnerable illex squid stock as a result of extra fishing effort in Argentine waters and agreed with Dr. di Tella that we should work to achieve a long-term fisheries agreement. He also took the opportunity to update Dr. di Tella on the seismic surveying in the Falklands designated area. He gave no undertaking that oil exploitation can only go ahead after prior agreement with Argentina. Dr. di Tella understands this position fully.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the effect of Argentina's entry into the squid licensing market on squid stocks in waters around the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Increased fishing of illex squid in Argentine waters this season may put extra pressure on the vulnerable illex squid stock. The agreement we reached with Argentina in December whereby they will issue 45 permits in response to applications for more than twice that number will mean that the risk is considerably less than it would otherwise have been.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies, for which his Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Goodlad: None of the non-departmental public bodies for which I am responsible has such powers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Trade Deficit

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the main types of consumer goods which contribute to the United Kingdom trade deficit.

Mr. Nelson: Overseas trade statistics suggest that "apparel and clothing accessories", "passenger motor cars" and "household fixtures and fittings" contributed significantly to the deficit in our trade in consumer goods in 1992.

Public Sec[illegible]

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those industries, businesses and enterprises remaining in the public sector.

Mr. Portillo: The following enterprises are currently in the public sector:

Audit Commission
Bank of England Banking Department
British Broadcasting Corporation
British Coal
British Railways Board
British Waterways Board
The Buying Agency
Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd
Central Office of Information
Channel Four Television Company Ltd
Civil Aviation Authority
Commonwealth Development Corporation
Companies House
Covent Garden Market Authority
Crown Agents and Crown Agents Holding and Realisation Board
Crown Estate Office
Development Board for Rural Wales
Driving Standards Agency
English Industrial Estates Corporation
Export Credits Guarantee Department
Forestry Enterprise
Her Majesty's Stationery Office
Highlands and Islands Enterprise
Horserace Totalisator Board
Housing Action Trusts
Housing Corporation
Housing for Wales
Industrial Training Boards
Land Authority for Wales
Local Authority Airports
Local Authority Bus companies
London Regional Transport
National Health Service Trusts
New Town Development Corporations and Commission
Northern Ireland Electricity Service
Northern Ireland Housing Executive
Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company
Northern Ireland Trust Ports
Nuclear Electric plc
Oil and Pipelines Agency
Passenger Transport Executives
Patent Office
Post Office Corporation
Remploy Ltd
Royal Mint
Scottish Enterprise
Scottish Homes
Scottish Nuclear Ltd
Scottish Transport Group
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority
Urban Development Corporations
Vehicle Inspectorate
Welsh Development Agency
Welsh Fourth Channel Authority

Also included in the public sector are local authority enterprises other than those in the table. No comprehensive list is held centrally; however the information that is available is published in the Business Monitor MA23, "Sector Classification for the National Accounts", which is available in the House Library.

Company Cars

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has recently received concerning the impact upon the purchase of company cars of uncertainty about the future arrangements for company car taxation; and what assessment he has made of the effect of that uncertainty upon company and fleet car sales by United Kingdom manufacturers.

Mr. Dorrell: United Kingdom car manufacturers have generally welcomed the proposal to move to a price-based system for taxing company cars. Some recent representations have noted the effects of future uncertainty on sales and sought decisions on the details and timing of the change at the earliest possible date. These effects are by their nature not directly measurable. We appreciate however the importance to the industry and others of certain and stable arrangements for company cars.

Budget Proposals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings he has had with hon. Members to discuss representations by their constituents on proposals being considered for his Budget.

Mr. Lamont: I have had several such meetings.

Supply Estimates

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he will publish the 1993-94 supply estimates.

Mr. Dorrell: Tuesday 9 March.

Redundancies

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, in respect of the current and next three financial years, the cost to the Exchequer of redundancy payments in respect of job losses and redundancies (a) in mining and related industries in the event that the proposals of 13 October 1992 are implemented, (b) in the armed forces under "Options for Change" and (c) in other fields; and what is his estimate of the overall cost of unemployment and other social security benefits to which those redundancies will give rise for each year that those made redundant remain unemployed.

Mr. Portillo: The amount and timing of grant payments to British Coal in respect of redundancies will depend on the pattern of voluntary redundancies and on the decisions about pit closures taken by the corporation in the light of the coal review, the outcome of which will be announced in a White Paper to be published shortly. The effect on related industries will depend on these decisions.

Payments to the armed forces under "Options for Change" are:

1992-93	160
1993-94	370
1994-95	350

(Rounded to the nearest £10 million.

These figures are the sum of the special capital compensation payments to armed forces personnel made redundant as part of the transition to new force structures, together with the net present value of the extra costs associated with the early payment of both their pension lump sums and their annual pensions.

It is not possible to estimate the costs of paying benefits for each year those made redundant remain unemployed; it is not known how quickly they will get jobs and the level of social security benefits payable depends on the characteristics of the individuals.

Income Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of a reduction of one penny in the basic rate of income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: About £1·6 billion in 1993-94, and £1·7 billion in 1994-95, if the reduction applied from the beginning of the 1993-94 tax year. The costs include the effect of the reduction in receipts of advance corporation tax, and the consequent effect on receipts of mainstream corporation tax. They are based on the same assumptions as those used in table 5.6 of the "Autumn Statement 1992", Cm. 2096 but have been corrected to allow for an error which applied only to these two figures.

Developing Countries (Debt)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress Her Majesty's Government have made in tackling the problem of developing countries' external debt during 1992.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have made substantial progress in dealing with developing country debt issues during 1992.

The Government are directly responsible for official bilateral debts. Proposals for rescheduling or restructuring such debts are dealt with multilaterally through the Paris club of creditor countries.

The Paris club reached agreements with 18 countries during 1992, involving the rescheduling or restructuring of over US$10½ billion of bilateral official debt. Three agreements were with middle-income countries—Argentina, Brazil and Bulgaria—and a further four were with lower middle-income countries—Cameroon, Ecuador, Jordan, and Morocco—which benefited from more generous rescheduling arrangments involving longer grace and repayment periods, known as "Houston" terms.

I am delighted to announce, however, that the majority of agreements, 11 in all, were concluded on Trinidad terms. The countries concerned were Bolivia, Ethiopia, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea Republic, Honduras, Mali, Sierra Leone, Tanzania, Togo, Uganda, and Zambia. This follows from the Paris club's decision in December 1991 to begin implementing the initiative of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister for providing concessional relief to the very poorest indebted countries.

In addition to the countries listed, Nicaragua and Benin benefited from Trinidad terms in 1991, and Mauritania in 1993, making 14 beneficiaries in all so far.

Trinidad terms provide for the equivalent of cancellation of up to half the eligible debt consolidated by the agreements. Each agreement contains an undertaking by creditors to consider the case for a reduction in the whole stock of the debtor countries' eligible debt to the Paris club after a period of proven economic and financial responsibility. During 1992 Trinidad terms agreements covered over US$3 billion of debt entailing the forgiving of over US$1 billion over the life of the agreements. Including Nicaragua, Benin, and Mauritania, over US$4 billion of debt has been restructured under Trinidad terms, and about US$1½ billion forgiven over the life of the agreements.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research Programmes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 26 January to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan), Official Report, column 606, if he will place in the Library the Government's papers to the December European Community Council on the future management of research programmes and the evaluation of existing research programmes.

Mr. Waldegrave: A copy of the evaluation of the second framework programme was placed in the Library in October last year. The United Kingdom's paper "Excellence in EC Programme Management—Looking ahead to Framework Programme IV" was an informal discussion document. However, given the general interest, I have on this occasion placed a copy of the paper in the Library.

Public Bodies

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what change there has been in the proportion of women being appointed to public bodies between the last year for which data are available and the previous year.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The percentage of appointments to public bodies held by women has increased from 23 per cent. in 1991 to 26 per cent. at 1 September 1992. Further details are available in the 1992 edition of "Public Bodies" published recently, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Waldegrave: No non-departmental public body for which my Department is responsible has such a power.

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The market tests completed since November 1991 by the Office of Public Service and Science, including its agencies, Her Majesty's Stationery Office and the Central Office of Information and the outcome of these tests is as follows:

Activity tested (and area)	Outcome
Conference and event management (CCTA)	Contracted out to Viewplan Ltd
Data preparation (Chessington Computer Centre)	Contracted out to Alpha Numeric
Reprographic services (COI)	Contracted out to Williams Lea Ltd
Security and reception services (Recruitment and Assessment Services)	Retained in-house
Training (Chessington Computer Centre)	Contracted out to Skill Advance and to Data Training

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are seven full-time and 41 part-time staff currently engaged on market testing in the Office of Public Service and Science, including its Agencies, HMSO and COI. The cost of market testing since November 1991 has been £705,000.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the amount of money paid out by the Legal Aid Board area offices at Newcastle upon Tyne and Leeds during the last financial year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board makes all payments centrally through its accounts office in London. It is therefore only possible to make estimates of the amount attributable to each area office. Estimates for the year ending 31 March 1992 for the area offices in question are as follows:

	£ million
Newcastle upon Tyne	40·7
Leeds	52·9

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1992, Official Report, column 25, when he expects to write with the details of the countries which have been subject to the United Kingdom's arms embargoes over the last 20 years.

Mr. Needham: I wrote to the hon. Gentleman on 13 January giving the information he requested.

Ship Building

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the future world demand for new merchant ships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not possible to make an accurate forecast of future world demand for merchant ships. However, it is generally expected that there will be an upturn in demand in the second half of the decade. It is likely that existing world merchant ship capacity will be adequate to meet the demand.

Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision his Department has made to approve infrastructure projects during the course of 1992.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has powers to approve the development of infrastructure in a number of areas. In 1992, following the merger of the Department of Energy with the DTI, he approved the construction of two power stations, the extension of three power stations, 954 overhead power lines, two cross-country gas pipelines and one gas pipeline landfall. The President also granted licences which will allow 12 companies to develop fixed telecommunications networks in the United Kingdom.

Overseas Markets

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies have been made within his Department concerning the obtaining of access for British companies to overseas markets by way of goods, services and finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: My Department continually monitors overseas market access for United Kingdom traders and takes action as and when appropriate.

Government Contracts

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how his Department is monitoring the tendering of contracts by Governments of EC member states within the framework of the single market.

Mr. Needham: Responsibility for monitoring the application and effectiveness of EC law on public procurement lies with the European Commission in co-operation with member states. Her Majesty's Treasury represents the United Kingdom in that context and co-ordinates responses to alleged breaches of the rules in the United Kingdom. My Department's single market compliance unit is available to provide advice to any United Kingdom supplier who suspects that the rules are being broken by a purchaser in another member state. The principal means of enforcement, however, lies in the hands of potential suppliers and contractors who can take direct legal action if they are harmed by a purchaser's failure to follow the rules.

Bicycles

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what occasion since February 1992 Her Majesty's Government have been consulted by the European Commission regarding the importation of Chinese bicycles; what representations were made to the Commission by the Government; what was the result of the Commission's preliminary investigation; when it was received by the Government; what action has been taken by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Last December the Commission consulted member states about the preliminary findings of their anti-dumping investigation into bicycle imports from China and Taiwan. For China, dumping causing injury to European Community producers was established and the Commission proposed a provisional anti-dumping duty of 34·4 per cent. to prevent further injury while the investigation was completed. For Taiwan, dumping was found to be de minimis and so no action was proposed. The Government informed the Commission on 21 December that we accepted its conclusions. It is now for the Commission to decide whether to adopt its proposals.

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the import of bicycles from China and Taiwan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: My Department has received representations from United Kingdom bicycle manufacturers arguing for restrictions on Chinese and Taiwanese imports as well as from United Kingdom importers and retailers who consider that trade should remain unimpeded. Other issues raised include the safety of imported bicycles as well as the customs duties imposed on both complete machines and their components.

Access to British Markets

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies have been made within his Department concerning the control of access to the British market by way of goods, services and finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Import policy issues are regularly and frequently analysed by my Department.

Military Equipment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what capacity his Department has to evaluate the post-sale veracity of end-use commitments made in export licence applications for sensitive and dual-use military equipment.

Mr. Needham: My export control organisation has the capacity to evaluate information from a wide range of sources—not least from exporters themselves—about the actual end-use of controlled goods. This information is taken into account in considering what action should be taken against evasion of controls, and what decisions should be made on future export licence applications where similar evasion might be attempted.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to investigate which of the exports to the former Yugoslavia—listed by the Minister of Trade to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent in his letter of 5 February—were in fact sent to the former Yugoslavia having been awarded an export licence.

Mr. Needham: No.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish in the Official Report the schedule of licences granted for the export of military goods to Yugoslavia for the period 1 January 1989 to 31 December 1992 included in the letter of 5 February to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent by the Minister of Trade.

Mr. Needham: Following is the schedule and my covering letter to the hon. Member:

Dear Llew

I am now able to let you have the attached schedule of licences granted for the export of military goods to Yugoslavia, as promised in the Prime Minister's reply to your Parliamentary Question (Hansard 23 November, column 456).

Your request for quantities has necessitated an examination of individual licences, which is extremely time-consuming; to go back to 1979 as you requested would take too many staff off normal licensing duties for too long, and the schedule therefore gives full details for 1 January 1989-31 December 1992. In many instances the number and range of items involved in shipments made under a licence makes it impossible to state quantity and value has therefore been given. I should also emphasise that the issue of a licence does not mean that the export took place.

Armaments and military equipment during that period fell within Group 1 of Part II of Schedule 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991 or its predecessor, the 1989

Order. The 1992 Order came into force on 31 December 1992 and no licences for former Yugoslav Republics were issued on that day.

All Group 1 licences were revoked on 3 July 1991 as a precautionary measure and any licensed goods not exported by that date would have been stopped from leaving the UK.

Following UK action, the EC embargo on exports of military goods was imposed on 5 July 1991 and the UN embargo on 25 September that year; UN sanctions on all trade with Serbia and Montenegro were imposed on 30 May 1992.

Applications since 3 July 1991 for Group 1 goods destined for former Yugoslav Republics have been refused unless for lifesaving equipment, much of it for UN operations.

Exports to the territories which comprise the former republic of Yugoslavia
Military, security and para-military goods and arms, ammunition and related material

Companies (Environmental Disclosure)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he intends to make to the proposal from his advisory council on business and the environment that all companies should adopt environmental disclosure as a requirement for listing on the stock exchange.

Mr. Eggar: The advisory committee's recommendation is directed at the stock exchange and it is for that body to consider and decide on its appropriateness. The recommendation has been brought to the attention of the stock exchange and I await its response with interest.

Expo '92

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has received for the future use of the British trade pavilion used at the Expo '92 exhibition in Seville; and what decisions he has taken.

Mr. Needham: Negotiations are now at an advanced stage with a private sector buyer for sale of the United Kingdom's Expo '92 pavilion. Subject to a satisfactory outcome, the purchaser intends to dismantle the pavilion and relocate it in the United Kingdom. It is hoped to bring the negotiations to a successful conclusion by the end of March 1993.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent communications he has received from HHL Publishing regarding its participation at the British pavilion at the Expo '92 exhibition in Seville.

Mr. Needham: Solicitors representing HHL Publishing wrote on 27 November 1992 about various aspects and received a detailed response to all points on 18 December.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent communications he has received from Farrow and Humphreys Ltd., in regard to services provided to the British pavilion at the Expo '92 exhibition in Seville.

Mr. Needham: Farrow and Humphreys Ltd. wrote on 13 January concerning the loss incurred in supplying the company that ran the pavilion shop, which is now in voluntary liquidation. I replied on 31 January.

Republic of China

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the total exports and imports between the United Kingdom and the Republic of China in each of the last three years.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom visible trade is published in the "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom" which is available in the Library of the House.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Insolvency Service expects to complete its review of its funding and fee charging policy.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The review is nearing completion and I will make known my conclusions in due course when I have had an opportunity to consider all the issues.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish the accounts of the Insolvency Service for 1991-92.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The statement of receipts and payments of the Insolvency Service's account for 1991-92 is expected to be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on 24 February.

Steel

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to hold discussions with (a) the Luxembourg Government and (b) the European Commission concerning state aids to Messrs. Arbed, steel producers, of Luxembourg and its subsidiaries.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has no plans at present to hold discussions with the Luxembourg Government. Arbed has made applications for research grants which are permitted under the ECSC state aid code, and these have been discussed between member states and the Commission. However, if evidence exists to suggest that Arbed is benefiting from illegal subsidies, the Government will pursue the matter vigorously with the Commission.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Eggar: The Hearing Aid Council is the only non-departmental public body for which my Department is responsible which has these powers.

Digital Audio Broadcasting

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to promote the introduction of digital audio broadcasting in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Digital audio broadcasting—DAB—is recognised as a very important development in sound broadcasting, and I am anxious to ensure that its benefits and opportunities are made available in this country. I am therefore establishing a United Kingdom DAB forum to co-ordinate and promote plans for the introduction of DAB in this country and to liaise with those with similar interests in other countries, particularly elsewhere in Europe.

Participants will include broadcasters, equipment manufacturers, retailers, service providers and other interested parties. The aim is to enhance the potential benefit for United Kingdom industry and ensure that British people will be able to enjoy the benefits of DAB, including high-quality reception in cars and on portable receivers, and additional services that the new technology will make possible.

My officials will continue their efforts to secure sufficient radio spectrum for the first terrestrial DAB transmissions to begin when the first receivers become available, which is expected to be around 1995.

Ammonium Nitrate

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to prevent the dumping in the United Kingdom of low-quality ammonium nitrate by the former eastern bloc countries; and if he will ensure that imported ammonium nitrate is bagged and labelled correctly.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 11 February 1993]: Anti-dumping action is a matter for the European Commission, which is currently investigating a complaint by the Fertiliser Manufacturers Association that ammonium nitrate is being dumped in the United Kingdom by certain republics of the former Soviet Union. The Government have urged the Commission to complete its investigation quickly and will consider carefully any proposals for anti-dumping measures which the Commission then makes. As regards bagging and labelling of dangerous substances such as ammonium nitrate, imports must comply with the relevant United Kingdom legislation and inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive are responsible for checking on this during visits to ports.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the weekly budget allocation per prison inmate for breakfast, lunch, tea and supper on 1 January 1973, 1 January 1983 and 1 January 1993; and what account is taken of inflation in uprating the allowance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no weekly budget allocation per inmate for food. Inmates are fed to a predetermined dietary scale which provides them with a set quantity of food and is therefore not affected by inflation. The items on this scale are either purchased from centrally negotiated call-off contracts or provided by Prison Service farms and gardens group.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons which have contracted out their catering functions; what arrangements have been made for monitoring the carrying out of the contract; and what system is in place to respond to complaints about the service provided.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The catering function is contracted out in the following prisons:

Belmarsh
Bullingdon
Downview
Highdown
Holme House
Woodhill
Lancaster Farms

Prison Service area catering managers inspect and report on technical standards in all prisons. This includes monitoring contract caterers for their compliance with the contract. Contractors are responsible to governors for the satisfactory overall performance of the contract.

The system for dealing with complaints about the service provided by a contract caterer is the same as for prisons with an in-house catering service.

Wolds Prison

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names and previous employment of (a) the governor and deputy governor of Wolds remand prison, (b) the governor and deputy governor of Blakenhurst prison and (c) the director and assistant director of Group 4 Court Escort Services Ltd.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A contracted-out prison is run by a director not a governor. The director of Wolds remand prison is Mr. Stephen Twinn. Wolds has no deputy director, but the head of custody is Mr. David McDonnell. The director of Blakenhurst is Mr. David Brooke, and the deputy director will be Mr. Bernard Higgins, who has yet to take up post. All were formerly members of HM Prison Service. Immediately prior to taking up his post at Blakenhurst, Mr. Brooke was on secondment to HM inspectorate of prisons. The director of Group 4 Court Services Ltd. in the east midlands and Humberside is Mr. Michael Hirst. There is no assistant director, but the two senior controllers are Mr. Ken Tuckwood and Mr. David Adams. All are former police officers.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the absconding of a man on remand at the Wolds on 9 February; and if he will institute an inquiry.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 9 February a prisoner escaped from Hull royal infirmary where he had been taken, under escort, from Wolds remand prison. He was re-arrested by the police during the night of 10 February.

The contractor's staff are carrying out a full inquiry into the causes of the escape. I have also instructed the controller to initiate an inquiry into matters connected with the escape.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Group 4 pays for the cost of providing gas, electricity and water at the Wolds remand prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No, but these are met from within the £6·9 million estimated cost of running the prison published on Budget day last year. Because Wolds is of a unique design, it was not possible to set benchmark levels of energy and water consumption for inclusion in the contract, but the contractor's efficient use of public utilities is monitored by the Home Office controller based at the prison who is assisted by the Home Office energy efficiency unit. Once energy consumption for the Wolds buildings over a full year has been established, it is intended to amend the contract so that the cost of public utilities becomes the contractor's responsibility.

Court Escort Service

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the contracting out of the court escort service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Invitations to tender for the contracting out of the court escort service in the Metropolitan police district are to be issued later this year. Subject to the tenders received demonstrating value for money, it is intended that contracted-out operations should commence in 1994. Next year, it is expected that tenders will be sought for three contract areas outside London, with the aim that the service should begin in those areas in 1995. It has not yet been decided which three areas will be covered.

Metropolitan Police

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the total cost to public funds of the Metropolitan police in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As police authority for the metropolis, I have approved estimates which provide for net revenue expenditure of £1,597,684 million in 1993-94. There will be a cash limit on current expenditure of £1,555,397 million. This is an increase of 5·2 per cent. on the budget estimate for 1992-93. Capital expenditure is subject to separate control.

I have also approved the issue of a precept of £128·15 per property in band D of the council tax valuation bands for Metropolitan police purposes.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect the applicability of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 has had on the time taken for the market testing of Strangeways prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The original deadline for receiving bids for the operating contract of Her Majesty's prison Manchester was 18 January 1993. This has been extended while we consider the implications of applying the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations [illegible]81. No new deadline has yet been set.

Winston Silcott

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what examination he has given to the new evidence in the case of Winston Silcott presented to him on 16 June 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Following representations made to my right hon. and learned Friend on 16 June 1992 about Mr.

Silcott's conviction for the murder of Mr. Smith, the Metropolitan police were asked to make inquiries. These have since been extended to take account of further representations received on 27 October 1992 and 25 January 1993. My right hon. and learned Friend will give further consideration to the case once the police inquiries have been completed.

Squatting

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when legislative proposals will be brought forward on the squatting of residential property.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 3 February, at column 203.

MFV Pescado

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what occasions the salvage of the MFV Pescado has been attempted; and what is now the earliest expected date for raising the MFV Pescado.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There has been no attempt to raise the Pescado for the past two months because of bad weather conditions. A further attempt will be made as soon as the tide and weather conditions are synchronised in such a way that a lift would be possible.

Immigration

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained by immigration officers on seeking to exit from the United Kingdom for a period in excess of one hour over the past 12 months; and what reasons were given for the detention.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of immigrants to, and emigrants from, the United Kingdom for each year for the period 1980 to 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 15 February 1993]: For a description of the available information on migration to and from the United Kingdom, and data for 1991, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) on 15 February at columns 19-20. Data for 1980-90 are given in table 2·1 of the 1989 and 1990 issues of the OPCS publication "International Migration", copies of which are in the Library. Data for 1992 are not yet available.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the responsibilities and activities of the group of co-ordinators on the free movement of persons referred to in the report of the immigration and nationality department 1991-92.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The co-ordinators' group is a group of senior officials set up by the European Council in 1988 to co-ordinate member states' action relating to the free movement of persons. It also has direct oversight of the work of the horizontal group on data processing, which is looking at the creation of a European information system for the exchange of information of inadmissible aliens, missing persons, stolen vehicles and other goods. The group also has a remit from the Maastricht European Council to plan for the implementation of title VI of the treaty on European union. It reports direct to the European Council.

Drugs, Northumbria

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to prevent the flow of drugs into Northumbria.

Mr. Jack: Drug dealers and traffickers are the subject of investigations by the Northumbria police drug squad and by No. 2 regional crime squad, in liaison with Her Majesty's Customs, and supported by the drugs division of the National Criminal Intelligence Service. Additionally, divisional officers are trained to recognise and deal with drug problems at street level. The outcome in 1992 was a significant increase over 1991 in the number of arrests for drug-related offences in the Blyth area. Northumbria police also give regular briefings on drugs to teachers to assist in informing children of the dangers of drug misuse.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of convictions in the Northumbrian police area involving under 18-year-olds and in total were for drug-related offences in each year since 1982.

Mr. Jack: The information is given in the table.

Number and percentage of persons convicted of indictable drug offences and all indictable offences in the Northumbrian police force area by age 1982 to 1991

Year	Aged 10 and under 18 Indictable drug offences Number	per cent.	Total indictable offences (=100 per cent.) Number	All ages Indictable drug offences Number	per cent.	Total indictable offences (=100 per cent.) Number

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates in prisons in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland who were held as category A prisoners on 1 January 1992 were removed from this category during 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During 1992, 56 category A inmates in England and Wales were downgraded to category B following review by the category A committee.

The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women who were held in prisons in (i) England and Wales, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Northern Ireland were category A prisoners during 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 December 1992, there were 554 male and four female category A prisoners in prison custody in England and Wales.

The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often the status of an inmate being held as a category A prisoner in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland is reviewed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In England and Wales the security category of category A prisoners is liable to review at any time in the light of security or other information. Usually a category A prisoner is held in the category on a provisional basis until conviction and sentence, when the case is put to the category A committee for formal review. Cases are reviewed at least annually thereafter.

The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the longest period of time an inmate at present being held in prison in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland has been in category A status as at 1 February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Twenty-six years in England and Wales. The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are being applied in selecting areas for resettlement of Bosnian refugees once they leave reception centres.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The areas selected will be those where support can be made available from refugee and other voluntary organisations, and where there is suitable accommodation.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much he expects to spend in the next six, 12 and 18 months on resettlement programmes associated with Bosnian refugees; and how much local authorities will be expected to pay.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Firm forecasts are not yet possible and depend on how quickly the international organisations are able to arrange the arrival of further groups from Bosnian detention camps and the tracing of their dependants. The proposed settlement of the Bosnians in various parts of the country seeks to avoid imposing undue burdens on individual local authorities.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the destinations and the arrangements for catering for the Bosnian and other former Yugoslav refugees admitted to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The areas provisionally identified for the resettlement of both former detainees and their dependants accepted by the Government at the request of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees are listed in the table. The Government are providing funds to the Refugee Council and the British Red Cross to find suitable housing and to provide support to the Bosnian families in conjunction with refugee and other voluntary organisations in the areas concerned.

Provisional resettlement areas

The West Midlands
The East Midlands/East Anglia
The North
The North-East
Central Scotland
London

Immigration Rules

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the immigration rules which prescribe that a person wishing to set up a business in the United Kingdom must leave the United Kingdom to make the application as part of the exercise in looking at regulations which unnecessarily inhibit business.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to set aside the entry clearance requirement for non-EC nationals wishing to establish themselves in business or self-employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to modify the immigration rules so that under the European Community's association agreements with Czechoslovakia, Hungry and Poland self-employed persons from those countries who own and direct their own businesses will be free to establish themselves in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering what changes will need to be made to the immigration rules in order to comply with the provisions in the EC association agreements with Hungary and Poland on the establishment of their nationals in this country once the agreements come into force.

Police Radios

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to counter the use of scanners by criminals to monitor police radios.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Specialist units already use encrypted radios and many police forces are now purchasing such radios for more general use. This is the most effective way of protecting police communications.

East-West Migration

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what follow-up action the Government are taking on the conference on east-west migration arising from the Berlin conference referred to in the report of the Immigration and Nationality Department 1991-92.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend attended a ministerial conference in Budapest on 15 and 16 February. This was a follow-up to the Berlin conference, and among other things considered a series of recommendations for tackling illegal immigration from and through central and eastern Europe.

Foreign Enlistment Act 1870

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prosecutions under the Foreign Enlistment Act 1870 in the last 10 years.

Mr. Jack: Records available centrally show no prosecutions in England and Wales from 1979 to 1991, which is provisional, under the Foreign Enlistment Act 1870.

Young Offenders

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders in (a) the north-west and (b) England and Wales were aged under 21 years in the last year for which figures are avilable.

Mr. Jack: Information for 1991, which is provisional, is given in the table.

Number and percentage of offenders cautioned and found guilty at all courts in the North West region and England and Wales by age and type of offence, 1991[1]

Area/type of offence	Aged under 21 years						All ages [= 100 per cent.]

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Art Collection

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give details of the charitable trust set up to administer the royal art collection.

Mr. Key: This is a matter for the director of the royal collection, who is secretary of the Royal Collection Trust and to whom the hon. Lady may wish to write.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what offers in lieu of tax allocated there have been since his last announcement on 14 January, Official Report, column 774.

Mr. Brooke: Since my announcement on 14 January, I am pleased to inform the House of the allocation of items offered in lieu of taxation. A painting, "San Bernardino preaching in the Campo at Siena" by Domenico Beccafumi, together with a chalk study of the painting, will be allocated to the Fitzwilliam museum. Two diagrams by Michelangelo will be allocated to the British museum.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a further statement on an independent fund for the restoration of Windsor castle to which he referred in his oral answer to the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) on 25 January, Official Report, column 695.

Mr. Brooke: I am pleased to say that following inquiries from a number of people who wish to assist with the restoration of Windsor castle, Coutts and Company, bankers are establishing a trust fund to receive donations for that purpose. This fund will be entirely independent of the royal household and the Government.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage was established in April 1992 since when 27 industrial posts have been lost as a result of contracting out. There has been no loss of posts at the Historic Royal Palaces Agency in this period.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Key: My Department is responsible for five non-departmental public bodies which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions. These are:

British Library
Broadcasting Complaints Commission
Broadcasting Standards Council
Football Licensing Authority
English Heritage

Of these, the Broadcasting Complaints Commission recovers the costs incurred for adjudications from the broadcasters.

TRANSPORT

Unseaworthy Vessels

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many ships' owners were gaoled for letting unseaworthy vessels sail as allowed for by the Merchant Shipping Acts in each of the past five years.

Mr. Norris: None.

Inshore Waters Forecast

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what instructions he has given to Her Majesty's coastguard concerning issuing to the public, or answering telephone inquiries from the public about, the inshore waters forecast for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: Each coastguard rescue centre broadcasts on marine VHF radio Marinecall inshore weather forecasts for their local areas at four-hourly intervals, or every two hours when a strong wind warning is in force. The Shetland isles is an exception and is covered by an inshore forecast especially provided by the Meteorological Office and paid for by the Department of Transport. Marinecall information is a commercial undertaking through a British Telecom recorded message service and is supplied free to Her Majesty's coastguard for promulgation by VHF radio only. Her Majesty's coastguard has undertaken not to compromise the service provided and, therefore, directs telephone callers to the Marinecall recorded service. However, BBC inshore waters forecasts, which are in the public domain, are given by Her Majesty's coastguard upon request via radio or telephone.

MFV Pescado

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the precise position of MFV Pescado at the time of its sinking; and whether this position is outside British territorial waters.

Mr. Norris: The wreck lies at Lat 50° 00·5′N, Long 4° 43·9′W which is outside United Kingdom territorial waters.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to investigate possible submarine damage to MFV Pescado.

Mr. Norris: The marine accident investigation branch inspectors considered every possibility during their investigation.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the deadline for the submission of compensation claims arising out of the sinking of MFV Pescado; and who is entitled to claim compensation.

Mr. Norris: Under the provisions of the Limitation Act 1980 claims in respect of death or personal injury have to be made within three years of the incident. Other claims in tort have to be made within six years. The dependants of any person who died may be in a position to make a claim; if they are minded to do so they should seek legal advice. If claims are made against the owner he cannot limit his liability in respect of crew members employed on the vessel.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to arrange for the MFV Pescado to be raised before the expiry of the deadline under which compensation claims must be made.

Mr. Norris: No.

Speed Limits

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to introduce automatic speed limits in rural villages between village signs.

Mr. Carlisle: The Department issued a policy document on speed limits and revised guidance on the criteria for setting local speed limits on 13 January. There are no plans to introduce automatic speed limits between village signs, as used in some other countries. The factors which determine the best site for a village name sign invariably differ from those for deciding the start of a speed limit. Speed limits need to be seen by drivers as reasonable if they are to be obeyed and combining the village and speed signs could result in many instances in a speed limit being applied before it is appropriate. There are severe penalties for breaking limits and drivers should know when they enter a new speed limit zone by passing a sign displaying a speed limit roundel.

MV Goldeneye

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions exist on a vessel of the type of MV Goldeneye attending a salvage outside United Kingdom territorial waters.

Mr. Norris: Restrictions on the salvage operations of vessels of the type of MV Goldeneye are governed by the terms of the load line or load line exemption certificate.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish further papers considered by the high-level forum for the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: Copies have been placed in the Library of the two papers considered by the high-level forum that I chaired in December. These are entitled "Proposed Consultation Arrangements" and "Developing Station and Junction Proposals".

Shipping (Radar Surveillance)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the cost of operating radar surveillance of shipping in the English channel in each of the last three financial years;

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the capital cost and annual running costs of installing radar surveillance equipment to monitor shipping traffic in the Fair Isle straits, the Minches, the Pentland firth and the North channel.

Mr. Norris: The operating costs of the channel navigation information service—CNIS—comprise extra manpower required by Her Majesty's coastguard at Langdon battery Dover and at the technical services unit at Highcliffe, the maintenance of the radar system and ancillary equipment, and an aircraft to identify vessels infringing the traffic separation scheme. Figures for the last three years, in £000s, and the estimated outturn for 1992-93 are as follows:

Manpower	87	89	101	113
Maintenance	357	303	389	550
Aircraft	129	120	139	100

[1] Estimate.

The manpower figures are estimated because they are not recorded separately within the budget for operating Langdon battery.

The radar system is being overhauled, with a new computer system being installed, at a total cost of £4·5 million. The maintenance costs this year have been higher because of this exercise but are expected to fall sharply when the new system is commissioned in April 1993.

The Department has not estimated the costs of installing and operating a similar system in any other area: this could be done only after a detailed study of the area concerned to determine what sites and equipment would be needed. The figures given for CNIS may not be indicative because some sites and equipment already available have been used, but they show the order of cost.

Radio Transponders

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the International Maritime Organisation on the subject of equipping vessels with radio transponders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: No representations have been made to the International Maritime Organisation—IMO—with regard to equipping vessels with radio transponders. However, the Department is actively considering their use in vessel traffic services at the International Association of Lighthouse Authorities, which has been tasked to undertake this work by the IMO.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Norris: None of the non-departmental public bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible has such power.

Northern Ireland Railways

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 418, if he will list the property owned by British Rail in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for British Rail.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 418, if he will make a statement as to the implications for Northern Ireland of clause 132(3) of the Railways Bill.

Mr. Freeman: The implications for Northern Ireland of section 132(3) of the Railways Bill are minimal. The main provisions of part I of the Railways Bill do not extend to Northern Ireland. The restructuring provisions in part II and associated provisions in part III, which apply to the British Railways Board, are extended to Northern Ireland to enable the board to deal with any property, rights and liabilities it may have in Northern Ireland. Other provisions extend to Northern Ireland where they amend legislation which so extends.

Vehicle Testing

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what advice he has issued to vehicle testing stations; and if he will place the full details in the Library;

(2) what information he has on how many diesel cars have suffered engine damage as a result of the new smoke emission tests in the MOT test;

(3) what steps he has taken to inform the public of the diesel engine new smoke emission tests; what evaluation of alternative test methods which are less liable to cause engine damage has been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: MOT testing stations have been advised how to test diesel-engined vehicles, and with what equipment. They have been specifically instructed not to test vehicles where the engine is not in a satisfactory condition, and they have also been given guidance on how to establish this. I have placed in the Library a copy of the advice to MOT testing stations about the MOT diesel smoke check, together with the relevant extract from the MOT tester's manual about the test procedure.

The test involves measuring smoke density while the eingine is run to its maximum governed speed so as to impose a similar sort of load on the engine as it experiences in normal driving conditions. The only alternative to measuring smoke density during a free acceleration test would require the use of a dynamometer. This would be a very much more expensive investment than the smoke meters which have been in use since 1 January.

The purpose of the test and the procedure are described in an advisory note which MOT testing stations have been providing to applicants with diesel-engined vehicles before tests have been carried out. As the note explains, the test procedure is not harmful to properly maintained engines, but an engine may well need prior attention where it has not been maintained in accordance with the manufacturer's recommendations.

Unfortunately I have received reports that there have been some cases where light-duty diesel engines have suffered damage during the metered test of smoke levels while the engine is under load, and I have therefore decided to suspend that part of the test temporarily as from today pending an investigation into these matters.

In the meantime motorists should continue to take diesel-engined vehicles only to MOT testing stations which have been authorised to test diesels, since they will still be continuing to check by eye that vehicles are not emitting excessive smoke or vapour at normal idling speed. Taken by itself, this visual check is not such an effective test because it does not indicate how an engine performs when a vehicle is out on the road. However, it will at least identify those vehicles with serious in-service performance deficiencies.

I hope that it will be possible to reinstate the metered test a little later in the year. Emissions testing during roadworthiness tests is an important feature of our policy on improving the environment, and if a diesel engine is putting out too much smoke we have a responsibility to ensure that the problem is rectified.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will require all vehicle testing stations to undertake MOT tests of diesel engines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No, the decision on whether to invest in smoke-measuring equipment must be a matter for individual MOT testing stations to make. If we were to introduce a requirement that all stations should be able to test diesel-engined vehicles there would be substantial over-capacity, and a lot of equipment would be left standing idle for long periods of time.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to inform the owners of diesel cars and diesel light commercial vehicles of the need to ensure that their vehicles are serviced before being submitted for the Ministry of Transport test diesel smoke emission levels test.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Diesel-engined vehicles do not necessarily need to be serviced before the MOT test, although an engine may well need prior attention where it has not been maintained in accordance with the manufacturer's recommendations. MOT stations have been providing an advisory note about this to all test applicants with diesel-engined vehicles before a test takes place. The note explains the purpose of the smoke check; the procedure involved; and it also advises against proceeding with a test in any case where an engine may not be in a fit state to be tested. In addition, testing stations have been instructed to review the service history of a vehicle with the applicant before starting the test, and to carry out a number of preliminary safety checks on the engine. I have placed a copy of the note and our instructions in the Library.

Unfortunately, notwithstanding the various precautions which have been taken, I have nevertheless received reports that there have been some cases where light-duty diesel engines have suffered damage during the metered test, and I have therefore decided to suspend that part of the test temporarily as from today pending an investigation into these matters.

East Coast Motorway

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposed east coast motorway from the Humber bridge towards London.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on 9 July 1992, Official Report, columns 321-22.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Birmingham northern relief road was expected to have been begun and completed before the tolling decision was taken.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In May 1989, when it was announced that the Birmingham northern relief road would be privately financed, the Department estimated that a public sector scheme could not have opened until the mid-1990s, allowing for a three-year construction period. That estimate was however very tentative: the statutory procedures for the public scheme had not been completed; the implications of new national traffic forecasts had not been incorporated; and the availability of public finance could not be guaranteed.

Behavioural Research

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the behavioural research programme announced in the 1980s and on its progress and interim results.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The behavioural studies research programme was initiated in 1986. Its aim is to quantify how the accident risk of individual drivers and motor cyclists depends on age, driving experience, gender and a range of social and psychological factors.

The programme has identified those skills and attitudes which are important for safety on the road. It is now exploring the ways by which key skills such as hazard perception can be taught, and how attitudes and behaviours can be influenced. It is providing a sound basis for measures to help reduce the number of casualties on our roads, in particular those associated with young or inexperienced drivers.

There is a continuing programme of work, involving the Transport Research Laboratory and 10 universities, which so far has resulted in more than 40 publications in the scientific press.

Heathrow Express

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current forecast timetable for (a) the rail track charges for the Heathrow express to be agreed and (b) the Heathrow express to start operating.

Mr. Norris: I hope that negotiations between the British Airports Authority and British Rail on track access charges and other matters will be concluded shortly. It ought then to be possible for the service to begin operating in 1997.

Rail Improvements

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the capital cost and the net present value of the proposed rail improvements at Borough Market and of the Thameslink 2000 project.

Mr. Norris: Preliminary estimates by British Rail suggest that the net capital cost of the Thameslink 2000 project as a whole would be about £1 billion; that it would have a negative financial net present value, discounted at 8 per cent., of about £600 million but positive net present value of about £1 billion if non-priced benefits were taken into account.

The element of capital costs in the Borough Market area is estimated to be in the order of £80 million to £90 million; no meaningful net present value can be attached to this element of the project in isolation.

British Rail is continuing its appraisal work.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of employees in his Department are registered disabled.

Mr. Norris: At 1 July 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, 1·3 per cent. of the total work force of the Department of Transport and its agencies were registered as disabled. It is not possible to establish the total number of departmental staff with disabilities because many people with disabilities prefer not to register.

Plutonium

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the transportation by air of plutonium in containers which do not meet the standards stipulated by the International Atomic Energy Agency; when this method of transporting plutonium began; why this method of transportation was chosen; and what assessment has been made of the likely effects if any of the aeroplanes which are used to transport plutonium were to be involved in a crash.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I know of no instance when plutonium has been transported in or over the UK in containers that did not meet the standards stipulated by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

In its report "The Transport of Civil Plutonium by Air", published in 1988, the advisory committee on the safe transport of radioactive material concluded that the health risk to people from the current transport of civil plutonium by air to and from the United Kingdom is not only extremely remote but also acceptable.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I regret that the information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. We will, however, be reporting on the outcome of this year's market testing programme.

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of statutory instruments laid before Parliament by my Department in each of the years 1980 to 1992 was as follows:

	Number
1980	66
1981	76
1982	57
1983	64
1984	98
1985	99
1986	148
1987	74
1988	86
1989	114
1990	85
1991	123
1992	127

Air Freight Facilities

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve air freight facilities between Scotland and EC member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The third package of aviation liberalisation measures, which came into effect on 1 January, has introduced a fully liberal air freight market in the EC. This means that routes between the United Kingdom and other EC member states can be operated by any EC licensed air carrier. The provision of facilities for such operations is for the carriers and airports concerned.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of how much time it would take for a sea-going tug to render assistance in the event of a tanker getting into trouble in the Minch.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 12 February 1993]: Such an assessment is not possible without defining the particular circumstances of the case including weather and the location of the casualty. Provision of emergency tug assistance is a matter between the owner or master of the casualty and tug suppliers.

Tankers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent assessment he has made of the environmental impact of tankers flushing out their tanks in the North sea.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 15 February 1993]: Efforts continue to deter tankers from illegally flushing their tanks in the North sea and to detect tankers that may do so. It is impracticable to undertake an assessment of the environmental impact of such flushing because of the difficulties of distinguishing between traces of hydrocarbons present in sea water due to tank flushing and those from other sources.

Bicycles

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance his Department has given regarding implementation of the requirement of imported bicycles to meet current trading standards regulations.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As the question falls to the Department of Transport, I have been asked to reply.

The sale of bicycles is regulated by the Pedal Bicycles (Safety) Regulations 1984 (SI 1984/145 as amended by SI 1984/1057) made under what is now the Consumer Protection Act 1987. These apply the relevant British Standard—BS—and will shortly be updated in line with the latest BS published last year. The regulations, which are enforceable by trading standards officers, cover the supply of all bicycles, whether imported or not.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the proposal for a Council regulation on shipments of radioactive substances within the European Community (Com (92) 520 final) delivered by the European Commission to the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Council on 7 December 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the explanatory memorandum number 11035/92 submitted by the Employment Department on 10 December 1992. A further supplementary explanatory memorandum will be submitted shortly.

EDUCATION

Further Education Colleges (Auditors)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what restrictions there are on colleges of further education after 1 April appointing the same firm of auditors to undertake both internal and external audit functions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Colleges entering the new further education sector on 1 April may use one firm to provide internal and external audit services. The Further Education Funding Council has advised colleges intending to use only one firm that they should satisfy themselves that the arrangements will provide an effective service; and that they should be able to satisfy the council's audit service that each role is clearly defined, that both sets of reporting requirements are fully met and that the internal audit coverage will not be limited to an assessment of the systems and controls that are carried out by an external auditor in forming an opinion. Colleges have also been advised by the council to ensure that their selection process ensures real competition.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements he is making to extend the responsibilities of the Audit Commission to encompass colleges of further education and grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Education Bill currently before Parliament includes proposals to allow the Audit Commission to carry out value-for-money studies for the Funding Agency for Schools. The commission is already empowered to undertake similar work for the Further Education Funding Council. The district audit service may, under current arrangements, compete with other companies to provide audit services for grant-maintained schools and, after 1 April, further education corporations, if it chooses to do so.

Primary and Secondary Education (Funding)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the basis for the difference between funding of primary and secondary school children; if he will make it his policy to fund children from the ages of five to 16 years on a national curriculum basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The current balance of funding between the primary and secondary phases reflects local education authorities' decisions about relative needs and priorities. Similarly, it is for local education authorities—LEAs—to decide the basis of funding for compulsory school education, within the resources available to them. Spending available per pupil in nursery, primary and secondary schools increased in real terms by over 45 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1990-91. LEAs' planned spending in 1992-93 was around 5 per cent. higher in real terms than LEA spending in 1990-91.

GCSE (Science)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of pupils achieved the highest grades in Sc 1, Sc 2, Sc 3 and Sc 4 in the recent pilot studies for the new GCSE science exam.

Mr. Forth: The purpose of these pilots was to test the examining and awarding processes, not the pupils. Those who took part will be taking GCSE examinations this summer, and had not completed the GCSE syllabus at the time of the trials. The marks are not therefore significant as predictors of GCSE grades.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will review the criteria to be applied in assessing Sc 1—the practical investigations—GCSE science.

Mr. Forth: Criteria for GCSE syllabuses in science were published by the School Examinations and Assessment Council in June 1992. I know of no reason why my right hon. Friend should review those criteria.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultations his Department had with organisations representing experienced teachers before introducing GCSE science.

Mr. Forth: Before the GCSE was introduced for all subjects in 1986, the Department undertook extensive consultations with a wide range of organisations and individuals, including teachers and their representative bodies.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimated annual cost of providing the helpline to answer questions from the public on grant-maintained status for schools.

Mr. Forth: The helpline is a pilot scheme which began on 1 February and will run for at least six weeks. Decisions about extending the service will be made in due course in the light of experience of the pilot.

The estimated running costs of the pilot are £25,000. A further sum, estimated at £200,000, is being spent to inform the public of the availability of the service in the national press and magazines.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies, for which his Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Boswell: None of the non-departmental public bodies for which this Department is responsible may compel anyone to carry out instructions at their own expense while at the same time charging fees to cover costs incurred for assessing work deemed necessary by a public body.

Academic Results

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out academic results as indicated by five GCSE A-C grades, aggregated for grant-maintained schools and aggregated for non-grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In England, the proportion of pupils aged 16 at the end of the academic year 1991-92 in grant-maintained secondary schools gaining five or more grades C or better at GCSE was provisionally 45·2 per cent. The corresponding proportion for other maintained schools was 35 per cent.

Nursery Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what statistics are available on the educational achievements of children who received pre-school nursery education relative to children who did not receive nursery education.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not collect statistics on this issue. Various research findings suggest that nursery education has benefits in preparing many children for their primary schooling. There is no conclusive evidence of its longer-term benefits or of its cost effectiveness relative to that of other forms of under-five provision.

PRIME MINISTER

Royal Family (Taxation)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 11 February, Official Report, column 1111, at which tax office the tax affairs of Her Majesty the Queen and the Prince of Wales will be administered; if any additional (a) training and (b) security measures are proposed; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue, who is a signatory of the memorandum of understanding, is responsible for the administrative arrangements relating to the tax affairs of Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. I have no doubt that he will ensure appropriate levels of training and security.

As with other taxpayers, confidentiality and security are important considerations. That is why details relating to where the tax affairs of the Queen and Prince of Wales will be administered will not be released.

Official Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister when he next plans an official visit to Southwark or Bermondsey.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 16 February.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 16 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Ministers (Resignation)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister what are the circumstances in which he would require Ministers to resign.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 February 1993]: I would not expect to have to do so. All ministerial offices are at the disposal of the Prime Minister.

HEALTH

Regional Allocations

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department will undertake the review of weighted capitation for regional allocations referred to in paragraph 232 of the report of the inquiry into London's health service, medical education and research; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The review will take place during 1993-94 with a view to implementing any agreed changes to the formula in 1995-96 allocations.

Brook Hospital

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the constituent of the hon. Member for Woolwich, national insurance No. PW130335D, cannot be discharged from the Brook hospital to appropriate care in the community.

Mr. Yeo: I will write to the hon. Member.

Magnetic Resonance Scanners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the number of magnetic resonance scanners in each NHS region per 1,000 population and the number of procedures carried out on each scanner between April and October 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The number of magnetic resonance scanners, including both national health service and private in each NHS region per million population is as follows:

England:	Number
East Anglian	0·96
Mersey	1·25
Northern	1·30
North East Thames	3·17
North West Thames	3·63
North Western	1·75
Oxford	1·95
South East Thames	1·09
South West Thames	2·69
South Western	1·84
Trent	1·28
Wessex	0·68
West Midlands	1·15
Yorkshire	0·82
Scotland:	2·16
Wales:	1·04
Northern Ireland:	0·35

Details of the number of procedures carried out on each scanner between April and October 1992 is not held centrally.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 152, if she will name the pharmaceutical companies on whose behalf assurances were sought that the limited list regulations would not be extended; and on what dates the inquirers were informed by her Department that at that time there were no plans to extend the selected list scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: Such detailed information about correspondence between the Department and individual pharmaceutical companies is treated in confidence.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to make a statement on the precise arrangements for the inclusion of a further 10 therapeutic categories of drugs which may now be included on the selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: We shall make an announcement after we have received advice from the advisory committee on national health service drugs.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drugs are on the market in each of the 10 categories proposed for addition to the limited list.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available relates to the number of different preparations dispensed in 1991 under the national health service in England in each of the categories. The following figures are for items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors and personal administration.

	Number
Antidiarrhoeal drugs	43
Antihistamines, hyposensitisation, and allergic disorders	156
Hypnotics and anxiolytics	156
Appetite suppressants	12
Treatment of vaginal and vulval conditions	52
Contraceptives	60
Anaemias and some other blood disorders	146
Drugs for the relief of soft-tissue inflammation	112
Drugs acting on the ear and drugs acting on the nose	130
Skin	1,776

Road Accidents (Charges)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics she keeps on the extent to which health authorities levy a charge for treating patients involved in a road accident.

Mr. Sackville: Information concerning charges levied under the Road Traffic Act 1988 is contained in the summarised accounts of health authorities and national health service trusts.

Psychiatric Beds

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric beds there were in 1986 and at the most recent date in (a) rural areas and (b) urban areas.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to respond to the first report from the Health Committee of Session 1992-93 on "NHS Trusts: Interim Conclusions and Proposals for Future Inquiries", House of Commons Paper No. 321.

Dr. Mawhinney: We expect to respond shortly.

Contracting Out

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of cumulative savings to the national health service from the contracting out of support services; and what plans she has to extend contracting out.

Mr. Sackville: Support services in the national health service have been contracted out since the earliest days and we have no estimate of the cumulative savings involved. It is estimated that in 1990-91 there were savings in excess of £125 million as a result of the market testing initiative started in 1983.

The plans for extending market testing in the NHS were set out in chapter 4 of the White Paper "Competing for Quality", Cm 1730 November 1991.

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by her Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table. Information relating to previous years is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Number of statutory instruments laid

1991	1992
91	112

Mentally Ill Patients

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were available in locked wards for mentally ill patients in (a) 1984 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally. Reports from health authorities suggest that there were 639 such beds in local district facilities in 1991, compared with 1,163 in 1986. This excludes places in regional secure units and other facilities for patients needing care in conditions of medium security.

Home Helps

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for health what is the percentage change in the number of home helps in Northumberland since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information, at 30 September 1991, shows 513 whole-time equivalent home helps employed by Northumberland social services, an increase of 33 per cent. since 1979.

Schizophrenia

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training is given to GPs in diagnosing schizophrenia.

Mr. Yeo: During basic medical education and vocational training, general practice trainees are trained to recognise psychiatric disorders including schizophrenia. Of the three years of formal general practice vocational training, two years are hospital-based. During this time over 40 per cent. of trainees currently choose a six-month period in a psychiatric department as a senior house officer.

Principals in general practice update and extend their knowledge of psychiatric disorders under the system of continuing education funded in all national health service regions.

All general practioners can refer patients for specialist attention both to confirm a diagnosis of schizophrenia and to obtain assistance in the management of this disorder.

Additionally community psychiatric nursing posts have been established in many districts to provide a psychiatric input into primary health care and can act as a resource for all members of the primary health care team, including GP trainees.

Contraceptive Pill

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has done into the medical effects to women of restricting the prescription of the oral contraception pill to the cheaper varieties.

Mr. Sackville: In advising the Health Departments on which contraceptives should not be available for prescription under the national health service, the advisory committee on NHS drugs will be required to ensure that all clinical need can be provided as economically as possible. In formulating its advice, I would expect the committee to have regard to the findings of relevant research.

Merseyside Ambulance Service

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the operation of Merseyside ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: Mersey regional ambulance service national health service trust consistently achieves the national standard laid down for emergency call response times. The trust is constantly striving to improve services to patients.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital calls were made by the Merseyside ambulance service in each year since 1987.

Mr. Sackville: Information on hospital calls is not held centrally. Information is available on patient journeys conducted by the Mersey regional ambulance service as follows:

Patient Journeys (thousands)

	Emergency	Urgent	Special Planned	Total
1987-88	108·5	29·0	649·0	786·5
1988-89	101·4	28·0	641·3	770·7
[1]1989-90	101·4	24·0	433·0	558·5
1990-91	103·4	27·2	576·0	706·5
[2]1991-92	102·1	38·4	561·0	701·5

[1] Due to industrial action during this period, 1989-90 figures do not reflect the total activity in the year.

[2] Figures are provisional.

Rehabilitation Facilities Elderly People (Care)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will lay down guidelines on basic minimal standards of service for elderly patients discharged into community care;

(2) if she will establish a policy of active rehabilitation for those people who require a short period of more integrated and intensive care than is possible in their homes.

Mr. Yeo: A wide range of rehabilitation facilities exists within the national health service and local social services authorities. Decisions about rehabilitation services are for the professional judgment of those concerned with the individual case.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free prescriptions were dispensed in the year 1991-92; what was the figure in 1978-79; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not available in the precise form requested. In 1979 an estimated 185·5 million prescribed items—about 60 per cent. of the total number —were dispensed free of charge by community pharmacists and appliance contractors. By 1992 the number had risen to 311·9 million—about 80 per cent. of the total.

Hearing Impairment

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has given local authorities about their duty in law to instal minicoms in the homes of people with severe hearing impairment where need is being assessed and irrespective of whether the individual disabled person already has a telephone; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We expect local authorities to be aware of their statutory duty, under section 2(1)(h) of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970, to provide assistance to disabled people with the provision of a telephone, and any special equipment needed to use it, irrespective of whether the individual disabled person already has a telephone, where they accept that there is an assessed need. Each case is assessed on its own merits by the local authority.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all those non-departmental public bodies, for which her Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are two non-departmental public bodies for which the Department is responsible which have such powers. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, under section 16 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, has the power to charge a fee for granting licences. Licences are required by centres providing treatments involving IVF, AID, egg and embryo donation and centres undertaking embryo research and storage of gametes and embryos.

The National Radiological Protection Board, under section 1 of the Radiological Protection Act 1970, has the power to charge for providing technical services to persons concerned with radiation hazards, but no power to compel such persons to comply with that advice.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of severance payment was approved by her Department in connection with the resignation of Sir James Ackers as chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) on 15 February at column 81.

Wessex RHA

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to hold a full investigation of mismanagement in the Wessex regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Like any other regional health authority, Wessex regional health authority is held to account through the national health service management executive which monitors its performance throughout the year.

Health Authority Chairmen

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all regional health authority chairmen who have received payments on retirement additional to their salary in the last five years, and the amounts of such payments in each year.

Dr. Mawhinney: With the agreement of the Treasury, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has decided to make a payment of £10,000 to Sir James Ackers under the provisions of paragraph 9(3) of schedule 5 to the National Health Service Act 1977. There have been no other such payments in the last five years.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the recent guidance issued by the management executive on extra-contractual referrals and the information to be made available to patients in the light of any deferral of treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. It is not appropriate to publish guidance which simply deals with the administrations of the extra-contractual referrals system. Current good practice requires patients to be kept informed of decisions affecting their treatment.

All health authorities have set local charter standards and many have published their own local charters. These include access to detailed information about local health services including waiting times for treatment.

GP Practices (Staff)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of (a) community nurses, (b) health visitors and (c) social workers employed in (i) fund-holding general practitioner practices and (ii) non-fund holding general practitioner practices.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. Data on practice staff employed by all general practitioner practices are available, but the categories of staff are differently defined. The total whole-time equivalent numbers in England in these categories as at 1 April 1992 are given in the table.

	Number
Management and Administration	6,069
Secretariat and Clerical	12,539
Receptionist	19,508
Computer Operator	1,133
Practice Nurse	8,945
Dispenser	1,014
Physiotherapist	77
Chiropodist	9
Interpreter/Link Worker	24
Counsellor	168
Message Taking	38
Other Duties	615
Total	50,139

Hygiene Regulations

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure sensitive and appropriate enforcement of hygiene regulations.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991 the Department of Health issued statutory code of practice No. 9 advising environmental health officers to conduct food hygiene inspections according to the relative risk posed to public health. A copy is available in the Library.

The Department works closely with the Local Authorities Co-ordinating body on Food and Trading Standards—LACOTS—a local government central body whose purpose is to co-ordinate trading standards and food hygiene activity throughout the United Kingdom. It gives advice to local authorities on common enforcement problems.

LACOTS has, with our encouragement, recently issued a circular to all environmental health departments giving advice on the enforcement of hygiene requirements in premises run by voluntary and charitable organisations. The circular advocates sensible enforcement based on assessment of risk to public health. A copy will be placed in the Library.

NHS Capital Expenditure

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of capital expenditure in the NHS in the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; and what was the split between hospital building and equipment.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 1 February 1992, c. 72]: I regret that there was an error in my previous reply. The corrected and updated figures are as follows.

Gross NHS capital expenditure in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 was £1,603 million, £1,645 million and £2,089 million respectively—the figure for 1992-93 is the estimate made for spring supply.

In 1990-91 capital spending within hospital and community health services was divided as follows:

	Per cent.
Building and engineering works	61·3
Equipment and furniture	12·8
Vehicles	1·6
Other	24·4

Figures for later years are not yet available.

SCOTLAND

GP Fund Holders

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new services will be provided by fund-holding general practitioners; and if he will publish the proposed remuneration scales.

Mr. Stewart: The regulations providing for the new services announced by my noble Friend the Minister of State on 26 January are in the process of being compiled. In broad terms they will permit GP fund holders, where appropriate and qualified and with the prior approval of the health board, to be reimbursed from the fund for providing certain specified diagnostic and minor surgical procedures for their own patients. There will be further discussion with health boards and the profession before the details of how the new services will operate are finalised

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner fund holders he expects there to be in each health board area by January 1994; and how many there are currently in each area.

Mr. Stewart: Latest information from health boards indicates the expected numbers of general practitioner fund holders from January 1994 will be as set out in the table.

	Number of GP fund-holders
Health board	Currently	Expected by January 1994
Argyll and Clyde	1	5
Ayrshire and Arran	Nil	3

Total	10	76

Hospitals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the admission policies of intensive care units to ensure surgical patients are not deferred or transferred to another hospital pre-operatively because of budget requirements.

Mr. Stewart: Admission policies for intensive care units are primarily the responsibility of the relevant health board. Admission to an intensive care unit or transfer to another hospital should be determined by clinical decision.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has received of general practitioners using the emergency bed service for obtaining admissions because of ward closures by providers.

Mr. Stewart: None. The admission procedures employed by the health boards in Scotland work well.

Health Service Property

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate has been made of the cost of undertaking all the identified backlog in repairs and maintenance to health service properties.

Mr. Stewart: Health boards estimate that at 31 March 1992 the expenditure required to put the essential estate in a sound physical condition was £240 million. This figure embraces backlog maintenance and such other work as the replacement of building elements which have reached the end of their useful life.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Information on the reduction in personnel as a result of contracting out work for the period 1979 to 1986-87 is not readily available. In the years 1987-88 to 1991-92 there was a reduction of 117·5 full-time equivalent posts in my Department and agencies as a result of contracting out.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Lang: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Genetic Fingerprinting

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what facilities are available to Scottish police forces in relation to genetic fingerprinting techniques; what plans he has to increase or develop these facilities; if he will list the resources he has allocated to (a) research and development and (b) provision of such services in the current financial year; what consultations he has had with chief police officers about genetic fingerprinting; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Scottish police forces have access to DNA testing or "genetic fingerprinting" facilities provided by police forensic laboratories, the Forensic Science Service for England and Wales and the private sector. Police authorities determine the resources allocated to their forces, on which police grant is paid at 51 per cent. of net expenditure. It is for chief constables to decide how the resources available to them are deployed. Scottish Office officials have discussed the issues relating to the holding of DNA test records with chief constables in the Scottish criminal record office controlling committee.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken in his Department to implement the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 February 1993]: These regulations, in so far as they embrace Scotland, apply to employers who conduct undertakings in relation to which a radiation emergency is reasonably foreseeable, and to regional and islands councils. The Scottish Office has no direct responsibility for their implementation.

Ambulance Services

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will authorise an inquiry into the management of the ambulance services in Renfrewshire.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 February 1993]: No.

EC Initiatives

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, columns 465-66, if he will list the projects.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The information requested is given in the tables:

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 February 1993]: A new division was established in my Department in August 1992 to co-ordinate the market testing programme. The six staff in the division are not exclusively assigned to market testing work. The division calls on the assistance of other Scottish Office staff and external consultants when required. The cost of the programme, including staff costs and fees for consultancy work, for the period November 1991 to the end of December 1992, is estimated at £425,000.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 February 1993]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Councillors' Allowances

Mr. McMasterster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the advantage allowance (a) including and (b) excluding expenses paid to elected members of (i) regional and (ii) district councils in Scotland in the last financial year; what is the projected average in each of the same categories in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 January 1993]: The Scottish Office Environment Department does not hold details of the allowances paid to individual local authority members. Each authority decides on its own scheme within the requirements of the Local Authorities Etc (Allowances) (Scotland) Regulations 1991, as amended. Similarly, the Department does not hold details of the payment of travelling, day or night subsistence allowances to members which are payable outwith the scheme.

Rates of all allowances will continue to be reviewed on a regular basis.

KS Properties

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Offical Report, column 457, what information his Department had on sales by KS Properties Ltd. of extensive land and buildings assets immediately prior to approving the writing-off of moneys due under mortgage deed by that company to the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 January 1993]: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (i) the expenditure on housing benefit rate rebates or poll tax benefit or community charge benefit in each region and nation for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 and (ii) the number of claimants of each benefit in each region or nation; and if he will express the payments as a figure of expenditure per head in each region or nation.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the tables:

(i) Expenditure (£ millions)[1]

Region	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
South East (excluding London)	183	186	361	245

Note:

[1] The expenditure figures are from information supplied by local authorities and represent the authorities' claim for benefit paid and not subsidy received. The 1991-92 are mainly from pre-audit claims.

(ii) Caseload (Number of claimants)[1]

[1] The numbers given are in benefit units and are averages of the four quarters figures for each year, including estimates for non responding authorities. A benefit unit may be a single person or a couple.

[2] The Community Charge was introduced in Scotland in April 1989. The figure given for Scotland for 1989-90 is the Community Charge rebate caseload.

[3] The Community Charge replaced domestic rates in England and Wales in April 1990. All figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92, therefore, refer to Community Charge Benefit.

(iii) Expenditure per case (£/year)[1]

Region	1988-89	[2]1989-90	[3]1990-91	1991-92

Wales	190	200	240	140
Scotland	270	250	320	260

[1] The caseloads and expenditures from which the average amounts per case are derived are not measured in the same way. The caseloads are from four point in time counts for each year.

Expenditure figures refer to the whole year.

Amounts of benefit refer to the benefit unit (including couples) and, therefore, in 1990-91 and 1991-92, should not be linked with average Community Charges, which are expressed as the charge per person.

[2] Due to the introduction of Community Charge in Scotland in April 1989, the 1989-90 figure for Scotland is for Community Charge rebate.

Pensioners

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the changes in income each year of pensioners who retired in 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Data on the average incomes of the same cohort of pensioners for successive years are not available.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Miss Widdecombe: Information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of employees in his Department is registered disabled.

Mr. Burt: On 1 July 1992, 1·7 per cent. of staff employed in the Department of Social Security were registered disabled. This figure excludes staff with disabilities who choose not to register.

National Insurance Contributions

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the additional revenue generated in a full year from the abolition of employees' national insurance contributions upper earnings limit.

Miss Widdecombe: If the upper earnings limit for employees' contributions was abolished, the additional revenue yield for 1993-94 would be about 2·9 billion. About 3 million employees would have to pay extra national insurance contributions as a result.

Pensions

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the value of the basic state pension as a proportion of gross average earnings in the United Kingdom for each year since 1978.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested in relation to Great Britain is in the table.

Year	Age	Basic State Pension as a per cent. of gross average earnings[1] Single per cent.	Couple per cent.
November 1978	under 80	23·2	37·1
	80 and over	23·5	37·7

November 1985	under 80	21·4	34·3
	80 and over	21·6	34·6
July 1986	under 80	20·5	32·8
	80 and over	20·6	33·0
April 1987	under 80	19·9	31·8
	80 and over	20·0	32·1
April 1988	under 80	18·8	30·2
	80 and over	19·0	30·4
April 1989	under 80	18·2	29·1
	80 and over	18·3	29·3
April 1990	under 80	17·8	28·5
	80 and over	17·9	28·7
April 1991	under 80	18·3	29·2
	80 and over	18·4	29·4
April 1992	under 80	17·8	28·5
	80 and over	17·9	28·6

[1] Average earnings are derived from the Department of Employment's New Earnings Survey (Great Britain) estimates of all adult earnings. Equivalent figures for the UK are not readily available.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has about the value of state pensions as a proportion of gross average earnings in each member state of the European Community.

Miss Widdecombe: There are no comparable statistics available on average earnings for the United Kingdom and the other member states of the European Community. Therefore, it is not possible to provide the information requested.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people aged 60 years and over began employment in his Department in 1992.

Mr. Burt: A total of 25 such people started employment in the Department and its agencies in 1992. This figure excludes casual staff, but includes nine staff who transferred from other Government Departments.

Carers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to raise the earnings limits on benefits available to carers.

Mr. Scott: The earnings limit for invalid care allowance will be increased from £40 to £50 per week from April 1993. This will be the fourth substantial increase in successive years. Also from April, a £15 earnings disregard will be introduced for all carers receiving income-related benefits.

Legal Aid

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of income that the compensation recovery unit will lose as a result of the Lord Chancellor's proposed changes in eligibility for legal aid.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available. Details held by the compensation recovery unit do not distinguish between those cases which have the benefit of legal aid and others.

Social Fund

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many grants and loans have been made from the social fund in Walthamstow in each of the last three years for which figures are available; how many applications were made; and what were the total sums involved.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is available in the Library for the years 1989-90, and 1990-91 by former departmental local office. Information is also in the Library for 1991-92 for the Benefits Agency's Lea-Roding district, of which Walthamstow is part.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the ability of the social fund to meet the needs of the poorest claimants.

Mr. Scott: The operation of the social fund is closely monitored by the Department. We also commissioned detailed research from the university of York's social policy research unit, which we are currently considering along with other recent reports about the scheme.

Income support is the main help which the Government give to people who have insufficient income to meet their general needs. The social fund complements income support by helping people with specific expenses in certain circumstances, which may not necessarily be related to their general financial circumstances alone.

Sick and Maternity Pay

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about current arrangements for the payment of statutory sick pay and maternity pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Following publication of the National Audit Office report on the operation of the statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay schemes, two parliamentary questions have been tabled by hon. Members and a letter about the schemes has been received from the general secretary of the TUC.

Since the EC pregnant workers directive was adopted last October, one hon. Member has tabled three parliamentary questions about the maternity pay aspects of the directive. Correspondence raising or referring to issues contained in the directive have been received from three hon. Members and one MEP, and a number of employers, employers' organisations and members of the public have asked questions about particular aspects of the directive's requirements. The Government are considering the maternity pay aspects of the directive.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Miss Widdecombe: Certain occupational and personal pension schemes are required to register, at their own expense, with the Occupational Pensions Board acting as pensions registrar and to pay a levy which is collected by the registrar to meet part of the cost of various consumer protection measures.

Voluntary Workers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social security applicants had applications refused or reduced because of the number of hours worked in the voluntary sector in each year since 1979.

Mr. Burt: There is no legislation limiting the amount of hours an unemployed person may spend working in the voluntary sector. Unemployed people who undertake unpaid voluntary work in this country may continue to receive benefits provided they satisfy the conditions of entitlement. These are that a person must be available for work and take reasonable steps, each week, to seek work.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proposals he has to provide financial assistance for domiciliary care for those who would be in principle eligible for assistance from the independent living fund for the first time between 31 December 1992 and 31 March; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the provision of domiciliary care comparable to that provided by the independent living fund to those of pensionable age after 31 March.

Mr. Scott: The provision of domiciliary care is a matter for local authorities and for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of Social Security what elements of water charges have been included in the Rossi index for each year since April 1988.

Mr. Burt: Since April 1992 variations in the cost of water, sewerage and environmental charges have been included in the Rossi index.

WALES

One-stop Shops

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Wales Enterprise regarding the development of one-stop shops for business and technology support in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The chairman of Wales Enterprise is a member of the enterprise and business support working group and therefore takes part in the discussions regarding the development of a co-ordinated approach to business and technology support in Wales.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total accumulated surplus of the seven Welsh training and enterprise councils since 1990.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest published annual accounts of the seven Welsh TECs show that at 31 March 1992 there were accumulated surpluses of £15,599,643. The TECs have plans to spend over £13·5 million of accumulated surpluses in the 1993-94 financial year in support of a range of training and enterprise measures.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of employees in his Department are registered disabled.

Mr. David Hunt: As at 1 January 1993 1·7 per cent. of staff in my Department had registered as disabled. These are the latest available details.

My Department also employs several unregistered disabled people.

Selective Assistance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total of regional selective assistance offered to the projects listed in his press release of 1 February; and when he intends to publish the details of the individual offers to the companies concerned.

Mr. David Hunt: The total of regional selective assistance offered is commercially confidential although details will be published in due course in the Employment Gazette, as indeed will details of all offers of RSA of £75,000 or more, but only when the first payments of grant have been made.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many housing units have been built in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The available information is published in "Welsh Housing Statistics No. 12 1992", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of homeless people in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Information is available for those persons accepted as homeless by local authorities for each year since 1979 and are shown in table 7.1 of "Welsh Housing Statistics No. 12 1992", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of outbreaks of sheep scab, by county and divided into less-favoured areas, in each month from October 1991 to the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of the distribution of sheep scab outbreaks in favoured and non-favoured areas could be supplied only at disproportionate cost. Information on sheep scab outbreaks is available up to May 1992; the figures between October 1991 and May 1992 are as follows:

Month	County	Number of outbreaks
November 1991	—	0
December 1991	Dyfed	1
	Gwynedd	1
January 1992	Clwyd	1
	Dyfed	2
	Gwynedd	3
February 1992	Dyfed	2
March 1992	Dyfed	2
	Gwynedd	1
April 1992	Clwyd	1

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of sheep affected by sheep scab, by county and divided into less-favoured areas and non less-favoured areas, in each month from October 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on the number of sheep affected in outbreaks of sheep scab is not available.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. David Hunt: A number of the 16 Welsh Office-sponsored executive non-departmental public bodies have statutory powers to require action by individuals, firms, companies or other institutions. This may involve some additional expense to those concerned, for which compensation is sometimes payable. In practice it is rarely necessary for the bodies to invoke such powers, and none charges fees for the cost to the NDPB of assessing any associated work.

Manufacturing Statistics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the change in the value of manufacturing (a) production, (b) employment and (c) investment in Wales from 1979-80 to 1991-92, in money and percentage terms after allowing for inflation.

Mr. David Hunt: Changes in manufacturing production are best measured by the Welsh index of production. Average quarterly manufacturing output rose by 23·9 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1991-92. The index of manufacturing production in the third quarter of 1992 stood at 126·3. The comparable figure for 1979 was 100·7.

The average number of employees employed in manufacturing fell by 91,000, 29 per cent., between 1979-80 and 1991-92. The estimated income from employment in manufacturing in Wales in 1979 was £1,728 million and in 1991 was £3,639 million, a rise of 110.6 per cent. Regional deflators are not available.

The available information on gross domestic fixed capital formation in Wales, by industry, was published by the Central Statistical Office in "Economic Trends No. 470, December 1992", which is available from the Library of the House.

Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, columns 2-3, corrected by corrigendum on 8 February, Official Report, columns 785-88, (1) what consultations he has had with the chairmen of (a) British Coal Enterprise, (b) British Steel Enterprise, (c) the Land Authority for Wales (d) the Cardiff Bay development corporation, (e) the Development Board for Rural Wales and (f) the Welsh Development Agency, in relation to accessing the £70 million European regional development fund gross capital expenditure allocation in Wales in 1993-94;

(2) which agencies and which main projects will provide the principal components of the £70 million European regional development fund gross capital expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The amount of ERDF available to Wales is determined by the European Commission under the agreed operational programmes.

In October last year my officials wrote to all public sector bodies in Wales notifying them of the new arrangements for ERDF grants. However, ERDF is available to a wide range of local and other public authorities, charities and voluntary organisations and it is too early to estimate the distribution of this grant between those bodies, or to say which projects will be funded, since it is for the relevant monitoring committees, comprising representatives of the sponsors concerned, to decide during the remainder of 1993 how to allocate the available resources.

I will make available full public expenditure cover for any sponsor receiving an allocation of ERDF from the programme monitoring committees.

A55, Pen-y-Clip

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will specify the main elements of overspending on the A55 Pen-y-Clip tunnels construction contract.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are no elements of overspending on the A55 Pen-y-Clip tunnel construction contract. All payments on this contract have been made within the provisions of the contract.

Contracts lasting more than two years, as in this case, are subject to an allowance for the increase in cost of plant, labour and materials throughout the period of the works. The contract also allows for variations and additions to overcome any problems or difficulties encountered during the execution of the works.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 341, what proposals he has to provide financial assistance for domiciliary care for those who would be in principle eligible for assistance from the independent living fund for the first time between 31 December and 31 March 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: The provision of domiciliary care is a matter for local and health authorities.

Capital Programme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, columns 2-3 and Official Report, 8 February, columns 785-88, what consultations he has had with the local authority associations in Wales concerning the estimate for local authority gross capital expenditure in 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: Under long-standing arrangements the local authority associations in Wales assess the level of provision needed in the settlement year to support the range of services which they provide. I take account of that assessment when deciding how much central Government support should be made available to them out of the Welsh block. My decision also takes into account my assessment of the ability of local authorities to finance expenditure from their own resources as demonstrated by outturn data for earlier years. For 1993-94 I further took into account the additional receipts available to authorities as a result of the temporary relaxation in controls on the use of capital receipts.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he had for tolls to be charged on each of the roads listed as major projects in his announcement of 1 February, Official Report, columns 2-3.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government expect to publish a Green Paper on road pricing in the spring of this year. It is too soon to speculate on the content.

"Roads in Wales"

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he estimates he will publish the 1993 supplement to "Roads in Wales".

Sir Wyn Roberts: Soon.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on the feasibility study commissioned by Cardiff Bay development corporation into the possibility of creating a major bird reserve on the Gwent levels to compensate for the loss of feeding grounds associated with the proposed barrage.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have now received the report of the feasibility study, copies of which are in the Library of the House. It concludes that the proposed freshwater habitats at Redwick and salt water ponds at Goldcliff have the potential to create an area of wetland of outstanding value for wintering and breeding waterfowl and for other rare or threatened bird species.

It is very encouraging that the consultants assessed the proposals to have such significant potential for wild birds. We are grateful to the Countryside Council for Wales and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, which have given constructive advice throughout this exercise. Planning permission will now have to be sought and the land acquired and, if this is successful, the Government will be making the necessary funding available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the expected contribution from the Exchequer towards the cost of a decommissioning scheme; and what part of this will be paid for from EC funds.

Mr. Curry: The Government have made provision of £25 million for the decommissioning scheme over a period of three financial years commencing April 1993. Council regulation (EEC) 4028/86 as amended provides for 70 per cent. of eligible expenditure to be reimbursed by the Community if vessels are scrapped and 50 per cent. in other cases. However, the operation of the Community budget means that the greater part of any such reimbursement is funded by the Exchequer.

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

Calendar year	Number of statutory instruments laid before Parliament
1985	67
1986	100
1987	87
1988	73
1989	95
1990	108
1991	84
1992	106

Details for the years 1980 to 1984 are not readily available.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of employees in his Department is registered disabled.

Mr. Curry: Counting part-time staff as whole units, MAFF and its agencies currently employ 155 registered disabled staff. This represents 1·5 per cent. of total staff but does not take into account staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Dangerous Animals

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in each year since 1980 licences issued under the Dangerous Imported Animals Act 1932 have been revoked or individual farmers prosecuted.

Mr. Soames: Since 1980, no licences, issued under the Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932, have been revoked and no prosecutions have been taken.

Live Exports

Mr. Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the European Commission proposals on the transport of live animals are expected to have on maintaining the United Kingdom transportation of live animals regulations.

Mr. Soames: Directive 91/628/EEC on the protection of animals during transport sets a framework of controls which are to be supplemented by additional Community rules. Commission proposals for these additional rules are still awaited. In the meantime the directive permits national measures to apply in the relevant areas. Such measures are contained in the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1992 which came into force on 1 January 1993.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis he exercises his discretion in (a) paying in full, (b) paying in part and (c) refusing late applications for suckler cow premiums.

Mr. Curry: Suckler cow premium is paid under Council regulation (EEC) 1357/80 as amended and Commission regulation (EEC) 1244/82, as amended. The time limits are strict. Applications received 10 working days after the closing date, which are otherwise eligible, may be admitted but premium is reduced by 30 per cent. Applications received after this 10 working day "period of grace" cannot be accepted unless there are valid force majeure reasons for doing so.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on how his Department will pursue the deregulation initiative with regard to regulations affecting the fishing industry; and what resources he has devoted to it;

(2) what assessment he has made of the scope for reduction in the number of regulations affecting the fishing industry and of the consequent effect on the manpower of his Department.

Mr. Curry: Each of the policy areas for which my Department has responsibility is being studied with a view to identifying where the burden of regulation is heaviest and can most easily be relieved. The fisheries sector is currently being studied within this overall review.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what treaty basis the common fisheries policy is established; how that basis will be changed under the treaty of Maastricht; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The common fisheries policy is established under article 43 of the treaty establishing the European Economic Community. This treaty basis would not be affected by the treaty of Maastricht.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies, for which his Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Curry: The following non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs—are funded primarily from industry levies and have powers to compel individuals etc. to carry out instructions:

Apple and Pear Research Council
Horticultural Development Council
Home Grown Cereals Authority
Meat and Livestock Commission
Sea Fisheries Industry Authority

In addition, Food From Britain, through its subsidiary body, the United Kingdom register of organic food standards, is designated as the authority responsible for the inspection system and the approval of private inspection bodies under EC regulations on organic food standards. Producers, processors and importers who wish to market their goods as organic must comply with EC standards and bear the inspection costs.The following NDPBS have power to compel but have no powers to charge:

Agricultural Wages Board
Agricultural Wages Committees
Wine Standards Board Agricultural Land Tribunals

Apple Juice

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates the matter of patulin in apple juice was considered by the Food Advisory Committee.

Mr. Soames: The Food Advisory Committee considered this matter at its meetings on 18 September and 29 October 1992.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response was given by officials in his Department in September 1992 to outside inquirers relating to the finding of patulin in apple juice.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry published on 3 September the agenda for the Food Advisory Committee meeting on 18 September. The agenda made clear that patulin in apple juice was an item for discussion by the committee. On 14 October the Ministry published a short note recording the points discussed by the committee at this meeting. The Ministry has no record of receiving any inquiries about patulin during this period.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date in December 1992 he or his officials met representatives of the fruit juice producers to discuss the advice of the Food Advisory Committee in relation to apple juice.

Mr. Soames: I met representatives of the fruit juice producers on 17 December 1992.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the scale of the testing of all batches of apple juice to the limits laid down for patulin following upon the finding of four contaminated samples.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom producers and retailers have undertaken to ensure that all supplies of apple juices meet the advisory level. The major producers have been testing every batch of apple juice.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date the British Soft Drinks Association was first informed of the finding of patulin in samples of apple juice.

Mr. Soames: The British Soft Drinks Association was first informed of the findings in a letter dated 21 July 1992 summoning the industry to a meeting with scientific and medical officials of the Ministry and the Department of Health.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates (a) samples of apple juice were found to contain higher than acceptable levels of patulin, (b) the samples were referred to the committee on toxicity and (c) the committee decided that there was no need to withdraw apple juice from sale.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry received the results on 5 June 1992 and referred them to the next meeting of the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment on 21 July 1992. The results had meanwhile been assessed by the scientific and medical staff of the Ministry and the Department of Health who had concluded that there was no risk to health. The committee's advice was passed to officials of the two Departments on the day of the meeting. The results and the committee's comments were subsequently considered by the Food Advisory Committee at its meetings in September and October 1992.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions relating to press inquiries on the incidence of patulin in apple juice took place at the meeting in August of departmental officials and the British Soft Drinks Association.

Mr. Soames: A meeting between officials from my Department and trade representatives, including the British Soft Drinks Association, took place on 23 July 1992.

At the conclusion of that meeting my officials told the trade that they had no plans to issue a press notice at that time, but that the results would be published as a food surveillance paper in the usual way, following consultation with the Food Advisory Committee.

There was no other such meeting, until my officials and I met the industry to discuss this matter further on 17 December 1992.

Milk Marketing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for arbitration in the case of disputes between successor bodies to the Milk Marketing Board and the Dairy Trades Federation.

Mr. Curry: On the ending of the milk marketing scheme all parties engaged in milk trading will operate within the legal framework applying to commercial trading bodies generally. The normal procedures for settlement of disputes, through the courts or by arbitration, will apply.

Food Additives

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what facilities are available to his Department in Harpenden for the testing of food additives and related drugs.

Mr. Gummer: The testing facilities I have at Harpenden are within the Central Science Laboratory. They are dedicated to the analysis of commodities for pesticide residues and preservatives.

Fruit Juice

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what testing takes place of imported fruit juice for toxic substances including patulin.

Mr. Soames: Responsibility for the general safety of imported food lies with the port health authorities and local authorities. Imported fruit juices are included in food surveillance programmes undertaken by the Ministry.

EMPLOYMENT

Betting Shops (Evening Opening)

9. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what protection is available to employees of betting shops who are faced with unilateral changes to their contract of employment as a result of evening opening hours being introduced.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Employees could seek redress in the civil courts by suing for damages for breach of contract, or through an industrial tribunal for infringement of statutory rights, depending on the circumstances.

Wages Councils

13. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received on plans to abolish the wages councils; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has continued to receive representations both for and against abolition of the councils.

Labour Statistics

14. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom; and what is the average rate in European Community member states.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: 10·7 per cent. and 9·6 per cent. respectively, excluding Denmark, Greece and Luxembourg.

17. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people were placed by the Employment Service during each quarter of 1992; and what were the targets set for the year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am delighted to be able to tell my hon. Friend that the Employment Service placed 312,000 unemployed people in the first quarter of 1992; 350,000 in the second quarter; 379,000 in the third quarter; and 367,000 in the fourth quarter. This is 10 per cent. more than the planned level. The agency is well on course to achieve its 1992-93 target of more than 1·4 million job placings by March this year.

21. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures for Cornwall.

Mr. McLoughlin: In December 1992 there were 28,606 claimant unemployed people in the county of Cornwall. This figure is on the unadjusted basis.

22. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of unemployment in the Carlisle travel-to-work area.

Mr. McLoughlin: In December 1992 there were 4,133 unemployed claimants in the Carlisle travel-to-work-area. This figure is on the unadjusted basis.

23. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of unemployed in Ilford, South in January 1979, January 1990, January 1991, January 1992 and January 1993; and how many registered job vacancies there were on the same dates; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unadjusted claimant unemployed in the Ilford, South constituency was 1,762 in January 1990, 2,615 in January 1991 and 4,259 in January 1992. The corresponding numbers of jobcentre vacancies were 102, 42 and 42 respectively. However, the latter represent only a minor proportion of the total number of jobs available to the unemployed of Ilford, South.

25. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently unemployed in the United Kingdom; and if she will provide a breakdown by age.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In December 1992, on the seasonally adjusted basis, there were 2,973,500 unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom. In October 1992, the latest date for which figures by age are available, those aged 24 and under, and those aged 40 and over each constituted just under one third of the total. More details can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Lambeth have been unemployed for (a) more than six months, (b) more than 12 months and (c) more than two years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is contained in the table and can also be obtained from the NOMIS database system in the Library.

Duration of unemployment in the Lambeth local authority district (October 1992)

Duration of Unemployment	Number of Claimant Unemployed
Over 6 months	15,119
Over 12 months	9,824
Over 2 years	4,225

Note:

Claimant unemployment figures by duration are available on a quarterly basis for the months of January, April, July and October and are not adjusted for seasonal influences.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the (a) number and (b) rate of long-term unemployed for more than one year in the Blyth Valley area.

Mr. McLoughlin: In October 1992, the latest date for which claimant unemployment figures by duration are available, 1,243 people—or 33 per cent. of all unemployed claimants—in the Blyth Valley parliamentary constituency had been unemployed for over one year. An official unemployment rate is not available.

Inward Investment

15. Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate has been made of the effect of United Kingdom employment legislation on inward investment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No such estimates have been made. However, we believe that the United Kingdom's employment legislation is one of many factors contributing to our good record in attracting inward investment.

Unemployment (Greater London)

16. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives she has taken this year specifically aimed at reducing unemployment in Greater London.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Service and training and enterprise councils deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes to help unemployed people find the best and quickest route back to employment. These programmes are available for unemployed people in Greater London, as elsewhere.

Prince's Youth Business Trust

18. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much her Department has given to the Prince's Youth Business Trust in each of the last three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Expenditure by the Department on the Prince's Youth Business Trust was £2·7 million in 1989-90, £4 million in 1990-91 and £3·2 million in 1991-92. The Department's expenditure matches funding raised by the private sector.

Competitive Tendering

19. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she is taking to investigate the effect on wages and conditions of employees of companies which win contracts for public services under the compulsory competitive tendering regulations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None; pay and conditions in private companies are matters for the employers and employees concerned.

Employment Growth

20. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made as to which sectors of employment show the most potential for employment growth in 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government do not forecast employment or unemployment.

Training and Enterprise Councils

24. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the levels of funding for training and enterprise councils in London in 1993-94.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The regional director for London is currently discussing levels of funding for 1993-94 with the London TECs.

Unemployed People

26. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she last met a representative group of unemployed workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During the course of our work, my ministerial colleagues and I regularly meet, or receive representations from, individuals and organisations concerned with the problems of unemployment and those it affects.

Job Advertisements (Pay)

27. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it a requirement for job centres to include in all job advertisement details of pay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details of rates of pay are important to jobseekers considering vacancies. Jobcentres always encourage employers to state the rates of pay, together with other information about the job. However, some employers prefer to discuss and agree exact rates of pay with the applicant and I believe they must have this flexibility.

Youth Training

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what monitoring has taken place (a) in London and (b) elsewhere of young people graduating from youth training schemes to establish how useful these schemes have been in enabling young people to find employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: A variety of information is collected about what happens to young people after leaving their youth training scheme. Information is collected from both training providers and from the trainees themselves. Local training and enterprise councils—TECs—may collect further information about their trainees but this is not held centrally. A regular monthly report containing information at national and regional level about the success of youth training trainees obtaining employment and qualifications is placed in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what statistics her Department collates with respect to youth training schemes.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the organisation of youth training lies with TECs and information about individual training schemes is not held centrally. TECs are required through their contract with the Secretary of State to provide only summary information. A copy of this contract is available in the Library. Although information on schemes is not available, information about trainees and their training is collected and held centrally.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of whether youth training schemes nationwide are achieving the goals for which they were established; and what criteria the Government use to determine the success or failure of youth training schemes.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's annual report, Cm 2205, explains the objectives of YT and how progress towards achieving these is measured. A copy of the current report is available in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in (a) London and (b) England are currently registered on youth training schemes.

Mr. McLoughlin: At December 1992, the latest date for which information is available, it is estimated that there were 19,300 people registered on youth training in London and 242,000 people registered on youth training in England. Both figures include youth credits.

Industrial Accidents

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 2 December 1992, Official Report, columns 221-22, how many accidents were reported to the Health and Safety Executive under the provisions of regulation 5(1) of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984 in each year since 1984; and if she will list for each accident the dangerous substances involved and for each substance the number of accidents in which it was involved; in which accidents members of the public were (a) requested to remain in their homes or (b) asked to leave their homes for the duration of the incident; and in which accidents restrictions were placed on (i) the consumption of foodstuffs, (ii) the consumption of drinking water and (iii) the use of water for agricultural or industrial purposes.

Mr. McLoughlin: The table shows the number of accidents which occurred between 1985 and 1992 that were reported to the Health and Safety Executive—HSE—under the provisions of regulation 5(1) of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 and the dangerous substances involved in each accident:

Year	Accident	Dangerous substances involved in accident
1985	1 accident: this involved:	 methane
1986	7 accidents: 2 involving: 1 each involving:	 cholorine isoprophylalcohol and methylalcohol

Year	Accident	Dangerous substances involved in accident
		hydrogen peroxide ethylene oxide and isobutane
		toluene
		compound fertilisers containing super phosphate and ammonium nitrate substances
1987	5 accidents
	1 each involving:	hydrogen gas, petroleum gas and hydrocarbon liquids
		propylene oxide petroleum liquids and spirits carbon disulphide methane
1988	2 accidents:
	1 each involving:	300 different chemicals including oxidising materials, highly flammable liquids, chlorinated hydrocarbon solvent
		ortho-nitro-benzaldehyde
1989	3 accidents:
	1 each involving:	ammonium nitrate fertilisers ammonia propane
1990	6 accidents:
	1 each involving:	2, 4, dichloronitrobenzene, potassium fluoride, dimethylacetamide, tetramethylammonium chloride and xylene isobutane and hydrofluoric acid white phosphorus
		toluene
		natural gas/methane propane, propylene, butane and butylene
1991	5 accidents:

Youth Statistics

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people aged 16 and 17 years old in Walthamstow are (a) on youth training schemes, (b) in full-time education and (c) in employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the status of young people in Waltham Forest is not available from the Department in the form requested.

Tribunal Decisions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what time the 10 and 90 percentiles and median cases for (a) industrial tribunal and (b) employment appeal tribunal decisions took from first application, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that the information is not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The average length of time for an appeal to come to hearing at the employment appeal tribunal in England and Wales is two years and in Scotland five months. The table shows the percentage of cases coming to first hearing at the industrial tribunals in various given periods of time for the 12 months ended 31 March 1992:

Percentage

Less than	England and Wales	Scotland
10 weeks	10	8
12 weeks	20	24
16 weeks	41	55
20 weeks	61	75

Engineering

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what figures she has for the numbers employed in the engineering sector.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information is as follows:

Employees in employment in the engineering industries in Great Britain: November 1992

(Not seasonally adjusted)

	Thousands
Mechanical engineering	626
Electrical and electronic engineering	471
Instrument engineering	88

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of statutory instruments laid before Parliament by the Department of Employment in each year of the years 1980 to 1992 is as follows:

Year	Total number of Statutory Instruments
1980	41
1981	48
1982	49
1983	34
1984	29
1985	31

DEFENCE

Naval Engineering College, Manadon

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-engineering Royal Navy officers attended courses at Manadon in maritime technology in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the academic year 1992-93, 45 non-engineering Royal Navy officers and one Royal Marines officer are studying courses in maritime technology.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current student enrolment at the Royal Naval Engineering College, Manadon; what was the annual intake in 1992-93; what is the current complement of (a) civilian and (b) service personnel; and what are the current annual running costs categorised as appropriate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For the academic year 1992-93 there are 444 students at Manadon, excluding students who attended short courses of less than one year's duration. The new intake comprised 291 students, excluding short courses. The current complement of the college is 176 civilians—67 industrials and 109 non-industrials—and 148 service personnel—102 officers and 46 ratings. The current annual running costs are £10 million broken down as follows:

Service pay	4·00
Civilian pay	2·40
Duty travel and subsistence	0·20
Utilities and fuels	0·50
Education fees	0·30
Office machinery, stationery and telephones	0·15
Works	1·20
Repairs/maintenance	0·60
Accommodation services	0·80
Computer software, stores and miscellaneous	0·05
	10·20
Less income from research	0·20
TOTAL	10·00

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many foreign students are currently enrolled at Manadon; and what was the fee income from such students in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 9 February 1993 there were 53 foreign and commonwealth students enrolled at Royal Naval Engineering College, Manadon. The income from the tuition of foreign students in the financial year 1991-92 was just under £500,000.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what higher-level degrees or their equivalent are awarded as a result of study at the Royal Naval Engineering College, Manadon; how many were awarded in 1991-92; and what is the normal period of study for such degrees.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Naval Engineering College, Manadon awards two MSc degrees—the advanced marine engineering course—AMEC—and the advanced marine defence technology course—AMDTC. Fourteen AMEC and seven AMDTC degrees were awarded in the academic year 1991-92. The normal period of study for MSc degrees is 54 weeks, including leave periods.

Sandhurst

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total student intake into Sandhurst in academic year 1991-92; what were the target intakes for (a) school-leavers and (b) graduates at each point of entry in academic year 1992-93; what have been the actual figures to date; how much has been spent on unprogrammed advertising for entrants to Sandhurst in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Archie Hamilton: The total student intake into Sandhurst in academic year 1991-92 was 808. Since September 1992 when the common commissioning course was introduced officer recruiting targets are set for the year as a whole and do not distinguish between graduates and school leavers. A total of 537 officer cadets entered Sandhurst during 1992-93 against an annual entry target of 611. No money has been spent on unprogrammed advertising for entrants to Sandhurst in 1992-93, although £186,000 was spent last November on an advertising campaign directed at the May intake.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies, for which his Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other insititutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Oil and Pipelines Agency is the only Ministry of Defence executive non-departmental public body which has powers—under the Land Powers Act 1958—to compel third parties to carry out its instructions and to raise fees, in connection with preparation and organisation, for the directed work.

Tay House, Glasgow

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what day a conditional missive was finalised between his Department and the vendors of Tay House, Glasgow; and if a financial penalty to his Department is incurred if the purchase is not completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No conditional missive has been finalised, nor any other form of legal agreement reached, with the vendors of Tay House or any other building in Glasgow or elsewhere which might meet the Army personnel centre requirement. No binding agreement on any building will be reached until consultation has been completed and final decisions have been made. There would be no financial penalty if, in the event the final decision were not to locate the centre in Glasgow. All speculation to the contrary is mistaken.

Barracks

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the potential additional accommodation available to soldiers in barracks which are not currently used by the Regular Army; and which barracks these are.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 11 February 1993]: In general, empty barrack accommodation in the United Kingdom is either not required and therefore in the process of disposal, or is being prepared for, or awaiting occupation by, incoming units. In addition, barracks at training camps will be empty from time to time when no units are undergoing training at those sites. As at 12 February 1993 the following barracks were empty:

Small Firms Research Initiative

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the small firms research initiative.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has for many years used the services of small firms, particularly to aid its applied research programme. One vehicle developed to foster such connections was the small firms research initiative—SFRI—launched in 1987 as part of the Government's small firms initiative and with an annual budget of some £1 million. Since then, however, a number of developments have occurred, in particular the formation of the Defence Research Agency—DRA. This organisation is already being run under commercial disciplines, introducing primary competition and more significantly secondary—sub-contract—competition.

The DRA has recently launched a new scheme, Pathfinder, through which it invites industry to put forward research proposals that meet both MOD customer needs and firms' own research priorities for up to 100 per cent. funding. The aim is to achieve a better return on the total research expenditure made by MOD and industry, to mutual benefit. Pathfinder embodies the concept of strategic alignment with industry and aims to improve the capability of industry as a supplier of defence equipment while simultaneously providing a degree of competition at research team level to stimulate cost efficiency.

The Government's policy on the support of small firms remains unchanged. But in the particular circumstances no useful purpose would be served by continuing with the SFRI given the launching of the new Pathfinder scheme, and no further funds will be allocated to it.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Property

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each local authority (a) the amount spent on council house repairs and maintenance, (b) the number of council-owned properties and (c) the average spent on repairs and maintenance per council-owned property in the latest available year.

Mr. Baldry: I have deposited a copy of a table showing the information requested by the hon. Member in the Library of the House. The table shows for 1992-93 each authority's estimated expenditure on repairs and maintenance debited to the housing revenue account including, where applicable, any expenditure via the housing repairs account; the average number of properties owned by each council during 1992-93; and the amount of repairs and maintenance expenditure per property.

Housing Investment, Waltham Forest

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the housing investment programme allocation for the London borough of Waltham Forest for each of the last 10 years, expressed at constant prices.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is given in the table. The figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are not directly comparable with those for earlier years because of the revisions to the capital finance system introduced in April 1990.

Housing investment Programme (HIP) allocations by Waltham Forest borough council and capital expenditure, 1983-84 to 1992-93

[1] Allocations for the years up to and including 1989-90 are final allocations, i.e., the initial allocation plus any increases to the initial allocation made in-year. The allocations figures for 1990-91 and subsequent years are the HIP allocations (housing annual capital guidelines plus specified capital grants) issued prior to the start of the financial year. These figures do not include any supplementary credit approvals issued during the year.

[2] Cash figures have been converted to 1992-93 price levels by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP market prices deflator.

[3] From 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation is an assessment or relative need for housing capital expenditure rather than a direct borrowing approval. Borrowing approval is now conveyed by the single, all service, basic credit approval.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the responses to the consultation paper "Local Authority Housing in England-Voluntary Transfer".

Sir George Young: Approximately 200 responses to the consultation paper have been received to date, some of which were submitted in confidence. A list of the responses will be placed in the House Libraries this week. The responses will be held for six months in the Department's central library, where inquirers may get access to them.

Primary and Secondary Education (Funding)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the basis for the difference between funding of primary and secondary children; what weight he gives to different age children in determining education standard spending assessments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The methods used for calculating the standard spending assessment (SSA) for primary and secondary children are set out in the "Local Government Finance Report (England) 1993-94" which was approved by the House on 3 February—copies are in the Library.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies, for which his Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Howard: None of the NDPBs sponsored by my Department has this combination of powers. Within the Department, however, Her Majesty's chief inspector of pollution exercises powers of this kind in the authorisation and regulation of industrial processes and of the use, storage and disposal of radioactive material.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of his departmental annual report 1993, Cm 2207, have been printed; at what cost; and to whom it has been distributed.

Mr. Howard: A total of 3,750 copies of the Department of the Environment annual report 1993 (Cm 2207) were printed. The costs of printing and publication were borne by HMSO, which aims to recover its costs from sales revenue. In addition to commercial sales and distribution within Parliament, copies of the report were sent to the chairmen and chief executives of the Department's non-departmental public bodies, to the chief executives of every English principal local authority and to a number of other interested bodies.

Leicestershire Structure Plan

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the validity of the advice from Leicestershire county council to his Department's inspector for the Leicestershire structure plan inquiry in October and November 1992 to consider the planning and transport submission as a whole rather than individual road schemes; what further action is planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, as amended by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, it is for a county planning authority to select matters for disucssion at an examination in public of its structure plan, in consultation with the chairman of the EIP panel. It is then for the county council to consider the report of the panel before deciding whether to modify the plan. In the recent EIP for its replacement structure plan, Leicestershire county council chose to examine its overall strategy for transport rather than any individual road schemes. The Department was not requested to intervene in the matter and will not be further involved until the county council publishes its proposed modifications later this year.

Empty Properties (Manchester)

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage of empty properties in Manchester's housing stock.

Mr. Baldry: Based on Manchester city council's most recent housing investment programme return, 5.4 per cent. of council housing stock was empty at 1 April 1992.

Construction Industry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 762 when the proposed Government/industry review of contracting and procurement arrangements in the construction industry is expected to report.

Mr. Baldry: Once an independent expert is appointed and begins work, I hope the report will be available within 12 months.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what type of computing system is used by the Property Services Agency accounts department; when it was installed; at what cost; and how has it affected the time taken to deal with accounts.

Mr. Redwood: The PSA services runs the Ross systems integrated accounting package on a developed DEC VAX hardware platform. The new systems, providing fully auditable commercial and vote accounting, went live on a phased basis for resource accounting between January and April 1991. Works bill payment and recovery was also transferred onto the Ross systems from the agency's centralised accounts division on a phased programme, which was completed in February 1992. The full strategic accounting system project cost £10·3 million; the later works bill payment project cost £1·5 million.

The new systems enable the PSA businesses to operate on an autonomous basis and improve financial discipline in PSA. The advantages of the new devolved accounting systems include the improved quality of local invoicing and the elimination of any delay in moving paperwork to a central location. Improvements in the payment cycle rely as much on the certification procedures and handling processes involved as on the systems themselves. The businesses are working to ensure that subcontractors are paid within 30 days of validation.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Property Services Agency owes Landscaping and Grounds Maintenance Ltd., of Trescan, Wembury Road, Wembury, Plymouth; if he will instruct the Property Services Agency to pay its outstanding debt; what is his policy on late payment of debts by the Property Services Agency; when the Property Services Agency last paid the company; and for what period of work.

Mr. Redwood: Landscaping and Grounds Maintenance Ltd. will be paid £30,590 later this week in respect of work let under a measured term contract. The company was last paid on 4 February 1993 for work done up to the end of November 1993. New payment arrangements are being implemented by the PSA building management businesses, where it is acting as agents for the Ministry of Defence for payment purposes under MOD property management contracts, such that subcontractors are paid no later than seven days following receipt of payment from the client, MOD. There is an existing obligation on the MOD to pay promptly and this together with the new payment arrangements being adopted by the PSAS will ensure that subcontractors should be paid within 30 days from validation.

The development of appropriate systems and procedural changes is underway so that by 1 April 1993 the five BM businesses are operating on this new basis. As these arrangements are introduced, I am demanding better performance from PSA in reducing delays in payments to contractors by getting invoices to MOD more promptly.

These arrangements create a contractual commitment on the managing contractor to make payment to subcontractors whose invoices have been accepted for payment by MOD and should be distinguished from other forms of "pay when paid" for capital works contracts whereby main contractors may withhold payments to subcontractors. This latter practice is inconsistent with the Government's prompt payment policy.

While the building management businesses are still in Government ownership, and they retain the obligations of the Government's prompt payment policy in their own right, a safety net will be in place so that PSA can ensure prompt payment to its contractors even where MOD had not paid PSA.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will provide details of the pay when paid policy of the Property Services Agency and of its purpose and origins; and if he will make a statement on the application to this policy of the Government's requiring Departments to pay their private contractors as quickly as possible.

Mr. Redwood: New payment arrangements are being implemented by the PSA building management businesses, where they are acting as agents for the Ministry of Defence for payment purposes under MOD property management contracts, such that subcontractors are paid no later than seven days following receipt of payment from the client, MOD. There is an existing obligation on the MOD to pay promptly and this together with the new payment arrangements being adopted by the PSA will ensure that subcontractors should be paid within 30 days from validation.

HEALTH

Orthodontic Facilities

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what orthodontic facilities exist in the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Sackville: Newham health authority is responsible for commissioning services for local residents. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Rosemary Walters, chairman of Newham district health authority, for details.

Dentistry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of time taken by her Department to respond after an appeal is lodged following a Dental Practice Board recommendation.

Dr. Mawhinney: Appeals to the Secretary of State, following complaints made under the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1992, are now handled by the family health services appeal unit at Yorkshire regional health authority under devolved powers. Appeals are given very careful consideration and the time taken to process them varies from case to case. Information about average times is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the capital allocation granted to each NHS trust in the northern region in 1992-93: and what allocation is proposed for 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is set out in the table.

NHS trust	Allocated 1992-93 £000	Proposed allocation 1993-94 £000
The Freeman Group of Hospitals	2,154	3,505
Newcastle Mental Health Services	252	288
Northumbrian Ambulance	2,210	1,695
Cleveland Ambulance	496	300
North Tees Health	2,508	1,498
Northgate	2,172	252
The RVI Group of Hospitals	15,081	7,627
Gateshead Community Health	356	1,084
South Tees Acute Hospitals	9,149	5,730

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to respond to the first report from the Health Committee of Session 1992-93, "NHS Trusts: Interim Conclusions and Proposals for Future Inquiries" —House of Commons Paper No. 321.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 16 February 1993]: We are publishing our response to the report today. Copies are available in the Library.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to provide day care centres for the mentally ill in Lambeth.

Mr. Yeo: It is the responsibility of district health authorities and local authority social services departments to contract for or provide a comprehensive range of mental health services to meet the level of psychiatric need in their areas.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in her Department and agencies for which she has responsibility.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health became a separate Government Department in 1989. Since then, the number of posts in the Department has been reduced by just under 30 as a result of contracting out.

Schizophrenia

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were registered as suffering from schizophrenia in (a) 1986 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: There is no requirement to register patients suffering from schizophrenia. The table gives the number of admissions to hospitals in England in 1986 and 1989-90, the latest year for which the quality of information permits publication, where a diagnosis of schizophrenia was made.

Number of hospital admissions in England for patients with schizophrenia 1986 (Mental Health Enquiry) and 1989-90 (Hospital Episode Statistics)

	Admissions
1986	29,419
1989-90	38,180

Mental Illness

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines her Department has issued to local authorities with regard to specific provision for the care of those in the 16 to 25 years age group suffering from mental illness.

Mr. Yeo: No guidance has been issued which specifically focuses on this age group. Services for disturbed adolescents—generally 12 to 19 years—were the subject of a report "Bridges over Troubled Waters" from the national health service health advisory service which the Department issued to health and local authorities in 1986. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Psychiatric Patients

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric patients are (a) long-term and (b) acute.

Mr. Yeo: The table gives the total number of residents in the mental illness specialty in England for (a) long-term —one year and over—and (b) acute—under one year—at 31 March 1992.

	Number
Under one year	25,500
One year and over	19,700

Note: These figures are estimates based on data obtained directly from regional health authorities.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric patients are waiting for a bed.

Mr. Yeo: Information about the numbers waiting by specialty is given in the publication "Hospital Waiting List, In-Patients and Day Cases"—ISBN 1 85839 003 6 —a copy of which is available in the Library.

Fund-holding Practices

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many GP non-fund-holding practices there are in each region; what percentage this represents of the regional total of GP practices; and what percentage of the regional population they serve.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is given in the table:

Region	Number of GP practices Non-fundholding April 1992	Percentage of GP practices Non-fundholding April 1992	Percentage of population served by GP Non-fundholding practice April 1992
Northern	479	92·3	84
Yorkshire	605	90·2	79
Trent	785	92·9	86
East Anglia	283	95·6	92
North West Thames	760	93·9	86
North East Thames	890	97·7	93
South East Thames	757	96·2	91
South West Thames	494	92·7	85
Wessex	405	91·8	85
Oxford	345	87·8	77
South Western	537	92·9	86
West Midlands	997	94·4	87
Mersey	396	88·6	81
North Western	847	96·4	91

Note:

1. The number of GP practices given above relates to the number of GP partnerships at 1 April 1992, including single handed partnerships.

Community Care

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the guidance note "Housing and Community Care Planning: The First Steps: A Review of Good Practice."

Mr. Yeo: The community care support force is aiming to complete and issue practical guidance on a range of issues concerned with housing and community care, by the end of March.

General Practitioners

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will extend to non-fund-holding GPs the facility to hold two sessions a week to perform a range of diagnostic tests and extra minor surgery procedures to be paid at the clinical assistant rate.

Dr. Mawhinney: Non-fund holding general practitioners may already provide these services under contract to district health authorities.

Walthamstow GPs

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of patients per general practitioner in Walthamstow.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

Operations (Waiting Times)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what instructions the national health service management executive has given to hospitals in respect of telling patients how long they will have to wait for their operations; and if she will make a statement.

(2) what action she is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists and to keep patients informed about the length of time they will have to wait for operations.

Mr. Sackville: We have made it a requirement under the patients charter that all hospitals must inform patients of the guaranteed date by which they will be admitted for treatment. In addition, a national telephone health helpline has been established under the patients charter so that patients can inquire about local waiting times as well as a wide variety of other health matters.

Since 1987 we have provided a waiting time fund of nearly £200 million to enable hundreds of thousands of additional patients to be treated from waiting lists. Waiting times for hospital treatment have improved dramatically and we are determined to build on this success.

Nurse Training

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of enrolled nurses have the opportunity for training or professional development on conversion courses to achieve first level registration; what information she has on the different levels of opportunity in different health authority areas; and which health authorities provide (a) the best and (b) the worst training opportunities for enrolled nurses.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce a national policy on training for enrolled nurses to ensure a consistent approach between regions; and if she will refund the costs of undertaking open and distance learning incurred by enrolled nurses.

Mr. Sackville: It is for regional health authorities, in consultation with employers, to plan for enrolled nurse conversion.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of enrolled nurses are from an ethnic minority; and what policies there are to increase training opportunities for this group.

Mr. Sackville: Data on the ethnic background of enrolled nurses are not held centrally. They will benefit from recent measures which have increased opportunities for conversion.

NHS Facilities (Access)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the rights of access to NHS facilities of patients with guide dogs; and what guidance she has issued or intends to issue on this matter.

Mr. Yeo: The patients charter sets a national standard requiring arrangements to be made to ensure that everyone, including people with special needs, can use the services. This includes patients with guide dogs.

NHS Management Audit

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to conduct an audit of management within the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that, as part of its continuing programme of value-for money studies, the Audit Commission is undertaking a study of unit management in the national health service. I look forward to considering its report.

Whistle Blowers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the consultations on her draft guidance on the protection of the position of NHS employees who draw attention to malpractice and fraud; and when she expects to issue formal guidance.

Dr. Mawhinney: Following the recent consultation exercise on the draft guidance on freedom of speech for national health service staff, we are currently considering the large number of comments received. We expect to be able to issue the final version shortly.

Waiting List Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has given to purchasers and providers of health care concerning the use of marginal cost pricing for waiting list initiative expenditure; in what circumstances purchaser-provider arrangements for operations can be based on marginal cost pricing; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Allocations to regional health authorities from the waiting time fund are tied to the achievement of waiting time targets and, in particular, national policy objectives. Standard pricing guidelines apply to the health care that these funds purchase. As marginal cost pricing should only be applied, in year, for unplanned spare capacity in excess of the assumed volume of service, waiting list initiative expenditure need not result in marginal cost pricing. It is therefore not appropriate to issue separate guidelines on marginal cost pricing of waiting list expenditure.

Huntington's Chorea

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were diagnosed with Huntington's chorea for each year since 1990; and what facilities for treatment are available.

Mr. Yeo: The latest year for which figures are held is 1989-90. In that year there were 725 admissions to national health service hospitals of patients whose diagnosis was Huntington's chorea. There is no known cure for this disease; the full range of NHS treatment and nursing and social care is available to people suffering from it. Because it is an inherited condition, genetic counselling is available to help with decisions about having children.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been commissioned into Huntington's chorea.

Mr. Yeo: The Department of Health has not commissioned any research into Huntington's chorea. The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid through the Office of Science and Technology, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research in this country. I understand that in the financial year 1991-92, the council's expenditure on research relevant to Huntington's chorea was £99,000. Other basic research funded by the council may, in part, have some relevance to Huntington's chorea. Universities and medical schools may also be funding relevant research.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the formula used to calculate the moneys (a) paid to GP fund holders, (b) the data collection methods used to inform the actual distribution of moneys and (c) any changes to either (a) or (b) she plans.

Dr. Mawhinney: The methodology for setting general practitioner fund holders' 1993-94 budgets was published in EL 92(83) "General Practice Fundholding: Guidance on setting budgets for 1993-94", a copy of which is in the Library.

The responsibility for setting budgets rests with regional health authorities who organise data collection locally. We have no immediate plans to change the way budgets are set but will keep this under review.

Private Nurses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified nurses were employed in (a) private hospitals, (b) private nursing homes and (c) private nursing agencies in each year since 1985.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 8 February 1993]: The available information is given in the table. The Department does not collect information about the staffing levels in private nursing agencies.

PRIME MINISTER

Sandringham

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his statement on 11 February, Official Report, column 1111, if Sandringham will be treated as a royal palace or as a private residence of Her Majesty the Queen.

The Prime Minister: Sandringham, which has official as well as private use, is a private asset of Her Majesty the Queen.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates have resigned before reaching retirement age in the last five years; and how many have offered as the reason for their decision the changes in the law and practice restricting their freedom of decision taking.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of resignations, other than on grounds of age, for the Lord Chancellor's area of responsibility in each of the last five years were:

Year	Number
1992	1,034
1991	820
1990	794
1989	799
1988	659

No information is collected centrally on how many magistrates have resigned with the reason offered being changes in the law and practice restricting their freedom of decision taking. Over the period the number of magistrates has grown from 24,112 to 25,340.

County Court Judgments

Mr. Channon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he proposes to arrange for county courts' judgments under £5,000 to carry interest; if he will authorise such interest to apply retrospectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has recently conducted a wide-ranging public consultation to evaluate the scheme introduced in July 1991 which provides for interest on county court judgments over £5,000. Responses to this consultation are currently being evaluated. While it would not therefore be appropriate to make a statement about any extension of the scheme at this time, my officials will be writing to interested parties to inform them of the outcome of the evaluation during the spring. I can, however, confirm that any extension of the scheme would not provide for interest to apply retrospectively.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when his evaluation of the question of county court judgments carrying interest will be concluded.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department's evaluation of the changes introduced in July 1991, which included a provision for interest on judgment debts over £5,000, will be completed by the end of this month.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Spending

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discount rate was adopted by Her Majesty's Government for public sector spending in the periods (a) 1979 to 1989 and (b) 1989 to the present; what considerations underpinned the change made in 1989; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's future plans for the discount rate.

Mr. Portillo: The Government specify a standard rate of discount for the public services. It is set on the basis of long-term factors, and is changed infrequently.

The 1978 White Paper, "The Nationalised Industries", Cm 7131, introduced the concept of the required rate of return—RRR—a real return on the whole of each enterprise's investment programme. No discount rate was centrally specified for the enterprises, but in practice a rate of 5 per cent. in real terms—the same as the RRR—or sometimes a higher rate, was used as a discount rate for investment appraisal.

At the same time as Cm 7131 an announcement was made about the discount rates to be used in the public services—Official Report, 5 April 1978, columns 147-48. A discount rate of 5 per cent. in real terms was specified for appraisals of choice of techniques, and a rate of 7 per cent. for other appraisals. In practice 7 per cent. was used only for the appraisal of roads.

A new regime was announced on 5 April 1989—Official Report, column 187. The RRR for public enterprises was raised from 5 to 8 per cent., and the discount rate for the public services from 5 to 6 per cent. However for central Government trading activities selling commercially into private markets the discount rate should usually be at least 8 per cent. Other special cases are listed in "Economic Appraisal in Central Government: A Technical Guide for Government Departments"—the "Green Book"—annex G, paragraph 12.

The 1989 changes were a consequence of the long-term trend in the real rate of return on private sector assets between the late 1970s and late 1980s. The increase in the discount rate for the public sector services was more modest, reflecting the smaller increase in the cost of capital to a private sector company raising funds for low-risk purposes.

The discount rate is intended to reflect long-term conditions, rather than cyclical factors.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made on the effect on public sector investment in energy technology projects of the current level of discount rates.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

My Department's investment in energy technology projects is for research or regulatory purposes, for which assessment on a discounting basis is not appropriate. All the programmes are, however, subject to regular review. The public sector energy industries, which operate in a commercial environment, assess their investment programmes according to the appropriate Treasury guidelines.

Pornography

Mr. Richards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are being taken to stop the flow of illegal pornography from other European countries into the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: The importation of obscene material and indecent material featuring children into the United Kingdom from any country remains illegal. Routine frontier Customs controls on goods from EC countries ceased on 1 January 1993, but anti-smuggling checks better targeted in response to the known risks continue to prevent the importation of illegal goods. Routine checks also continue on goods from non-EC countries.

Income Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the annual cost of introducing a 35 per cent. income tax rate for all income (a) between £23,700 and £26,000, (b) between £23,700 and £30,000, and (c) between £23,700 and £35,000; and what would be the annual revenue from introducing a 50 per cent. rate on (i) all income over £50,000, (ii) all income over £60,000 and (iii) all income over £70,000.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimates are as follows:

Band of taxable income over which 35 per cent. rate would be charged £	Revenue cost in full year at 1992-93 income levels £ million
23,700 to 26,000	170
23,700 to 30,000	400
23,700 to 35,000	600

Level of taxable income above which 50 per cent. rate would be charged £	Revenue yield in a full year at 1992-93 income levels £ million
50,000	1,360
70,000	950

The estimates do not allow for any behavioural effect that might result from such changes to the tax system and do not include capital gains tax.

Charities (Taxation)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had from the Charities Tax Reform Group in regard to taxation on charities; what reply he is sending; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The Charities' Tax Reform Group—CTRG—has suggested that charities could be compensated by grant in aid for their irrecoverable VAT on non-business expenditure incurred in carrying out their charitable objectives.

I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget speech. I have replied to the CTRG along those lines. However, I am also expecting to meet the group shortly to receive further representations.

Balance of Payments

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to endeavour to reduce the United Kingdom balance of payments deficit.

Mr. Portillo: The Government can best assist traders by keeping inflation and interest rates low. Inflation is now at its lowest level for 25 years and below the European Community average. Interest rates are the lowest for 15 years, and are the lowest in the European Community. The extra support for the Export Credits Guarantee Department announced in the autumn statement will also benefit many exporters.

The success of this approach is demonstrated by the number of overseas investors choosing to locate here. In 1991 the United Kingdom had over 40 per cent. of the stock of Japanese inward investment to the EC.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the net balance of trade in manufactured goods in the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. Nelson: The balance of trade in manufactured goods for December 1992 was published by the Central Statistical Office in the "UK Balance of Payments—Current Account in December" press notice which was published on 28 January 1993, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. The information is also available on the Central Statistical Office database which may be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

European Co-operative Statute

Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy on the European co-operative statute, passed by the European Parliament on 22 January.

Mr. Nelson: The Government's views on the proposed European co-operative statute were set out in the explanatory memorandum on European Community legislation submitted to Parliament on 14 May 1992. The Government are analysing responses to a consultative document issued last year and will be reporting on their implications in a further explanatory memorandum later in the year.

European Investment Fund

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to revise the terms of the Maastricht treaty and its protocols to take account of the decision at the Edinburgh European Council relating to a European investment fund; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: None.

Tax Arrears

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will raise the income limits which govern the Inland Revenue's practice for remitting arrears of tax where information provided to the Revenue has not been used within a reasonable time.

Mr. Dorrell: I am pleased to announce that the limits are to be increased from today.

The Inland Revenue's practice of remitting tax in cases where the Department has not made timely use of information available is set out in the White Paper of July 1971—first report from the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration: Session 1970-71: cmnd 4729. The proportion of arrears collected varies according to the size of the taxpayer's gross income; the balance of the arrear is remitted.

The following new scale of limits will apply to arrears of tax, the actual or likely amount of which is first notified to the taxpayer or his agent on or after 17 February, 1993:

Gross Income £	Remission
15,500 or less	All
15,501-18,000	¾
18,001-22,000	½
22,001-26,000	¼
26,001-40,000	$\frac{1}{10}$
40,001 or more	None

These figures apply to all taxpayers and exceed the previously separate scale for pensioners which is abolished from today.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The Financial Services Tribunal.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to obtain the power to sanction grant-maintained status to new schools established in (a) redundant local education authority premises and (b) redundant non-LEA premises.

Mr. Forth: It will be for promoters of new grant-maintained schools to provide premises. When determining such an application under the provisions of the Education Bill currently before the House, the Secretary of State will take into consideration the suitability of any premises. This would apply equally whether or not the premises were in LEA ownership.

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to obtain the power to award grant-maintained status to new schools whose intake is selected on the grounds of (a) academic ability or (b) artistic, sporting, scientific or other ability.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill currently under consideration in the House will enable the Secretary of State to award grant-maintained status to new schools that select on the grounds of academic ability or selection by specialism.

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to obtain the power to allow an existing independent school company to establish a new grant-maintained school in (a) redundant local education authority premises and (b) non-LEA premises.

Mr. Forth: It would be for the promoters of an existing independent school company to provide the premises for a new grant-maintained school. If they wished to use the redundant LEA premises for their new GM school, this would be a matter between them and the local education authority. If they wished to establish the school in a non-LEA premises, they would be free to propose this.

The Government are considering bringing forward an amendment to the Education Bill to make it clear that promoters of existing independent schools, as well as voluntary bodies, will be able to seek grant-maintained status.

Secondary Schools

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 807, what estimate he has made of the total number of places in secondary schools in England and Wales, the number he now believes are surplus to requirements and the number of the total, actual or estimated, that are currently located in temporary or mobile accommodation and the numbers located in laboratories, workshops or other specialist teaching space as defined in departmental circular 11/88 of 1988.

Mr. Forth: Questions about the level of surplus places in Welsh secondary schools are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. On the basis of the Department's survey of school capacity, we estimate that in 1991 there were some 3·5 million secondary school places in England, of which up to 700,000 were surplus, although not all of these are practicably removable. It is not possible to say how many secondary school places were, or are, located in temporary or mobile accommodation, laboratories, workshops or other specialist teaching spaces.

Schools (Space Requirements)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what criteria or evidence from practising teachers his Department took into account when formulating the space requirements for pupils in primary and secondary schools used in the content of Departmental circulars (a) 11/88 and (b) 6/91.

Mr. Forth: The Department undertakes fieldwork to monitor the use of teaching accommodation, including discussions with practising teachers, and the results are fed into the formulation of space requirements.

Special Needs Pupils

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to amend section 2 of the Education Act 1981 to place the onus upon local education authorities to justify segregation of special needs education pupils away from mainstream schools.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill currently before Parliament will put a qualified duty on LEAs to integrate children with statements in ordinary schools unless that duty is incompatible with the wishes of the parent. The Bill will also establish an independent special educational needs tribunal. LEAs will be required to justify their decisions over a child's placement on an appeal by the parent to the tribunal.

Further Education

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is taking to assist towards improved success rates in further education and to increase motivation among those in the 16 to 19-year-old age groups who are involved.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's clear policy is to increase both the participation and attainment of 16 to 19-year-olds. Public expenditure plans already provide for a substantial expansion of provision. Within this framework, we are working with and through the new Further Education Funding Council, qualifications bodies and others to promote three high quality qualification pathways—GCE A-levels and AS, general national vocational qualifications and national vocational qualifications—and to help young people choose the courses which are best for them. We are also working to develop and publish indicators to demonstrate and encourage the improved performance that will follow this better match of provision to need.

Seven-year-olds (Testing)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table covering a composite of English, mathematics, science and technology for the most recent standard assessment tests for seven-year-olds and ranking local education authorities according to level 3 attainment.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the ranking of local education authorities in England according to attainment at level 3 and above in a composite of English, mathematics, science and technology for the 1992 standard assessment tests for seven year olds.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to reply to the letters dated 2 December and 2 February from Dr. D. Taylor, vice chairman of the governors at Churston grammar school, Brixham, South Devon, about the status of incremental enhancements in teachers' pay scales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Both letters were answered on 16 February.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Drug Misuse

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to health education and drug misuse to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 15 to 19 March 1993.

European Court (Phone Calls)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will take steps to provide an abbreviated dialling code to allow hon. Members to make direct telephone calls from the House to the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I have arranged for the telephone numbers of the European Court of Justice and of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the EC to be included in the abbreviated dialling system.

Members' Pay

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Lord President of the Council what are the average costs in salary and allowances of one hon. Member of Parliament.

Mr. Newton: At 31 March 1992 the full parliamentary salary was payable at the rate of £30,854 per annum and the ceiling figures for the office costs allowance—OCA —and additional costs allowance—ACA—were £28,986 and £10,786 respectively.

For the year 1991-92 nearly all hon. Members claimed the permitted OCA maximum and most of the 621 hon. Members who were entitled to the ACA claimed the maximum.

Given the wide variation of travel costs for individual hon. Members, it is not possible to give a meaningful average.

Select Committees

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to strengthen the Select Committee system.

Mr. Newton: I have no particular plans to alter the workings of the Select Committee system, but am always ready to consider proposals from hon. and right hon. Members.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total cost, including an estimate for the time of civil servants involved, of the conference on market testing held at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre on 18 January.

Mr. Waldegrave: The total cost of this conference was met by the subscription fees paid by delegates. The cost of the time of the civil servants involved cannot be identified separately: discussions with private sector companies are an integral part of their work to take forward market testing.

Open Government

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to announce the results of his open government initiative.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The results of the open government review will be announced in a White Paper later this year.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chncellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a copy of the report into the operation of freedom of information laws in Australia, Canada and New Zealand submitted to the Cabinet Office by Mr. Robert Hazell at the conclusion of his civil service Nuffield and Leverhulme travelling fellowship in 1986-87.

Mr. Waldegrave: This report was prepared on the basis that views expressed by the federal and provincial governments concerned were given in confidence. They would need to be consulted before the report was made generally available. However, an article by Mr. Hazell based on the reports was published in the summer 1989 issue of the quarterly journal of the Royal Institute of Public Administration.

TRANSPORT

Seaborne Trade

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the tonnage of the United Kingdom's seaborne trade in each year since 1979; and how much of this trade was carried (a) in United Kingdom registered ships and (b) in ships carried by United Kingdom ship owners.

Mr. Norris: The total tonnage of the United Kingdom's seaborne trade in each year since 1979 and the share of this trade carried in United Kingdom registered ships are given in the table:

	Total (thousand tonnes)	Percentage in United Kingdom ships
1979	251,276	29
1980	230,982	34
1981	242,654	28
1982	242,292	28
1983	247,108	24
1984	274,078	23
1985	286,070	23
1986	298,356	21
1987	297,940	22
1988	289,014	21
1989	287,324	21
1990	300,475	19
1991	299,601	18

No information is available on the basis of ship ownership.

Tankers

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statutory provisions which currently exist for the purposes of regulating moored tankers in Lyme Bay and other United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Norris: At the present time, articles 9 and 14 of the Convention on the Territorial Seas and Contiguous Zone 1958 govern the freedom of all ships to proceed through and anchor in this region during the normal course of a passage.

Regulations have been drafted under section 35 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988, to govern ship-to-ship transfers of dangerous goods, marine pollutants, noxious liquid substances in bulk, oil fuel bunkers, crude oil and refined products, within United Kingdom territorial limits beyond port limits, including Lyme bay. These regulations will be laid before Parliament in the near future.

In addition, United Kingdom regulations giving effect to the Safety of Life at Sea Convention 1972—SOLAS—and the Convention for Preventions of Pollution from Ships 1973-78—MARPOL—generally apply to non-United Kingdom ships within our territorial seas.

Shetland Oil Spill

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the economic cost of the MV Braer oil incident including the economic effect on fisheries, tourism and the local community.

Mr. Norris: Shetland Islands council is undertaking an economic impact study of the Braer incident. It is likely to be some time before the results are available.

Buses

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish a consultation document on possible amendments to the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Freeman: I do not intend to alter the basic deregulatory regime set up by the Transport Act 1985. There may, however, be aspects of its working that could be improved and I intend to issue a consultation paper on them shortly.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action has been taken to implement commitment No. 77 in the "This Common Inheritance" second year report relating to the provision of better information to bus passengers and the development of measures for promoting the use of buses.

Mr. Freeman: I have allocated a further £15·5 million for measures to promote bus use in 1993-94, some of which relate to passenger information systems, and have also allocated funds to a trial of low-floor buses. I have commissioned research into the provision of information to bus passengers and will consider whether to issue guidelines in the light of this research.

Radioactive Materials

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, c. 584, to the hon. Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill), what consideration his Department has given to keeping a data base of movements of radioactive material by road, rail or air.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not considered that the compilation of such a database would help the Department with its responsibilities for the safe transport of radioactive material.

Rail freight

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Rail employees were made redundant as a result of the ending of Trainload Freight seeking contracts on the West Highland line.

Mr. Freeman: None. British Rail will make every effort to redeploy displaced staff when this traffic ceases at the end of March.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many people were directly employed by Railfreight Distribution in each of the past five financial years;

(2) how many people were directly employed by Trainload Freight in each of the past five financial years.

Mr. Freeman: Railway staffing is a matter for BR.

Following is the information for Railfreight Distribution:

	Number
1987-88	1,394
1988-89	1,390
1989-90	1,579
1990-91	1,684
1991-92	2,898

Train crew are not included, as they are brought in from the passenger sectors and Trainload Freight. The increase in the numbers of staff for 1991-92 reflects the changes brought by the initiative "Organising for Quality"; operational regions have been abolished, and their staff are now employed by RfD. Previous increases in staffing can be attributed in the main to preparations for channel tunnel freight services.

Trainload Freight currently employs about 13,500 staff. Comparable historical data are not readily available.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on freight losses from the railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has received several representations from hon. Members and private interests. During the Railways Bill Second Reading debate, my right hon. Friend proposed three new measures intended to assist the rail freight industry.

British Airports Authority

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory provisions and mechanisms exist to protect the customer and individual consumer of services provided by airports run by BAA.

Mr. Norris: All airports are governed by the Airports Act 1986, under which the Civil Aviation Authority can remedy or prevent unfair or discriminatory trade or pricing practices concerning the handling of aircraft, passengers and their baggage. In addition, at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports there is a statutory five-yearly review of all activities affecting airport users. The Office of Fair Trading also has powers to investigate other commercial activities at all BAA's airports under consumer and competition legislation.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration the Government have given to the scope for competition in respect of airports operated by BAA plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Government believe in free, open and fair competition in the air travel and airports markets and will continue to ensure that the interests of consumers and operators alike are protected against anti-competitive practices. Charges at BAA's airports are subject to regulation by the Civil Aviation Authority, which has powers to remedy any specific instance of conduct which unreasonably discriminates against airport users or unfairly exploits an airport's market strength.

Public Transport

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of (a) bus services, (b) train services, (c) maritime ferry services and (d) other public transport services, in each year since 1981.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the number of public transport services in Scotland is not available. Figures that are available appear in the annual publications "Scottish Transport Statistics" and "Bus and Coach Statistics". The following table gives the number of vehicle kilometres on bus and coach services run by operators based in Scotland and by Strathclyde Passenger Transport Executive—Underground.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Whisky

Mr. Sims: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the result of the recent meeting of the Council of Ministers which reviewed the EC spirits definition regulations requiring a minimum alcoholic strength by volume for whisky.

Mr. Curry: The Council accepted a recommendation by the EC Commission that the minimum alcoholic strength of whisky should remain at 40 per cent. by volume.

Linseed Crop

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to bring this season's linseed crop into the set-aside regime.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission's price-fixing proposals include the addition of linseed to the list of crops eligible for aid in 1993 under the arable area payments scheme, which includes provisions for set-aside. The timing of this proposal takes no account of farming practice and causes considerable difficulties for linseed producers. I am therefore opposing it.

Inspectorate for Plant Health

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the powers of the inspectorate for plant health.

Mr. Curry: The powers of the plant health and seeds inspectorate are set out in the Plant Health (Great Britain) Order 1987.

The inspectorate is empowered to take appropriate action to ensure that a high plant health status is maintained, consistent with the necessity to allow the continuation of trade wherever possible. This will continue under the single market arrangements for plant health which are due to come into force on 1 June this year.

Ruminant-based Protein

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been carried out under the auspices of his Department to ascertain whether it is safe to feed pigs and poultry with ruminant-based protein.

Mr. Soames: There is no evidence of a naturally occurring spongiform encephalopathy in these species. The Tyrrell committee has advised that there are no grounds for extending the ban on the use of ruminant protein to non-ruminants, provided that the specified bovine offals are excluded. Nevertheless, studies are in hand involving the feeding of brain material from confirmed cases of BSE to pigs and poultry, and epidemiological surveillance of pigs and poultry is maintained.

Russian Food and Fish

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider taking anti-dumping action in relation to imports of Russian food and fish.

Mr. Curry: I am aware of the United Kingdom fishing industry's concern that the current weak market for some species may be caused in part by the importation of cheap Russian cod. The United Kingdom, along with other member states and the EC Commission, is urgently studying the situation on the Community market in relation to the reference prices and associated provisions set out in EC regulation 3759/92 on the common organisation of the market in fishery and aquaculture products.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safeguards have been introduced to prevent the acquisition of days at sea entitlements by foreign-owned British-registered fishing vessels.

Mr. Curry: Days-at-sea conditions will be attached to the licences of all British registered fishing vessels of over 10 m in length, regardless of ownership.

Sea Fish Conservation Bill

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were his estimates of the cost of enforcing and administering the Sea Fish Conservation Bill before the Bill was introduced; and what they are now.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 2 February, column 133.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area of agricultural land in Nottinghamshire is set aside under the common agricultural policy; and what is its annual value.

Mr. Curry: A total of 777 hectares of land are currently set aside in Nottinghamshire under the five-year set-aside scheme at an annual cost of around £146,000. Information on the land set aside under the new arable area payments scheme will not be available until growers have to declare the area later this year.

Drainage Authorities

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how set-aside land is treated in the investment appraisal carried out by a drainage authority when seeking central Government grant aid;

(2) which crops and livestock products are excluded from consideration as a cost or benefit in the investment appraisal carried out by a drainage authority when seeking central Government grant aid on the grounds that there are no net national costs or benefits due to supply control mechanisms.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry plans to publish next month revised and updated project appraisal guidelines on the investment appraisal of flood defence and coast protection capital works. The guidelines will contain specific instructions to drainage authorities covering these issues. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what guidance is given to drainage authorities on the maintenance of the original protection or drainage standard beyond the design life of an earlier scheme;

(2) what guidance is given to drainage authorities on the maintenance of previously grant-aided works where within the design life of the scheme (a) land use changes have occurred that mean that greater economic benefits could be gained by no longer maintaining that scheme and (b) damage to a site of acknowledged environmental interest is occurring through continuing to maintain that scheme.

Mr. Curry: Maintenance work is essential to the sound management of flood defences and is the responsibility of local flood defence and land drainage authorities. The Ministry does not issue separate guidance on the economic appraisal of maintenance, as opposed to capital, work, but authorities are expected to achieve value for money by keeping their maintenance programmes under review throughout the design life of defences and beyond if they remain sustainable. The Ministry intends to produce guidance on post-project evaluation of defences for authorities later this year.

The Ministry's publication "Conservation Guidelines for Drainage Authorities" advises that authorities should consult the statutory conservation bodies annually and in advance on their maintenance programmes for the following year. A separate Ministry guide, "Environmental Procedures for Inland Flood Defence Works", published last December jointly with English Nature and the National Rivers Authority, advises that the impact of defences on the environment should be audited and that mitigating action may be required if the environmental or engineering objectives have not been achieved.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of rotational set-aside.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry has an ongoing programme of monitoring and research on the environmental effects of set-aside, including changes in botanical composition and impact on wildlife habitats, weeds, diseases, pests and nitrate leaching. We were able to draw on this and on advice from environmental organisations in establishing the rules for management of rotational set-aside under the new EC arable scheme last year. It is as yet too early to assess the impact of the rotational set-aside arrangements, which were introduced only last autumn, but we will be carrying out a full evaluation of both these and the non-rotational set-aside arrangements which are due to be introduced from this autumn.

SCOTLAND

Hospitals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet representatives of the British Medical Association to discuss (a) bed closures, (b) cancelled operating lists and (c) hospitals running out of money before the end of the financial year.

Mr. Stewart: Although my right hon. Friend meets representatives from the British Medical Association from time to time, he has no immediate plans for a further meeting at present.

Heritage Sites

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional resources he will make available to Scottish Heritage to assist in the emergency preservation of architectural sites on the coasts of the Western Isles, Orkney Isles and Shetland Isles following the storms in January.

Sir Hector Monro: Although these storms did considerable damage, they were but one episode in a continuing problem which Historic Scotland is already addressing by monitoring, survey and excavation. I am satisfied that Historic Scotland has the resources it needs to continue this work.

Legal Aid

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on his proposed changes to eligibility for civil legal aid and advice and assistance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has carefully considered the various representations he has received on the proposals to change the eligibility criteria for legal aid in Scotland as set out in my reply of 16 November 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Robertson), Official Report, Vol. 214, col. 64.

Given the distinctive features of the Scottish legal system and in particular the interface between advice and assistance and full civil and criminal legal aid, my right hon. Friend has decided to retain a contributory band of advice and assistance. Those on income support or family credit or with a weekly disposable income of less than £61 will be eligible for free advice and assistance. Those whose weekly disosable income falls between £61 and £147 will receive advice and assistance subject to the payment of a contribution on a sliding scale set by reference to the level of the applicant's disposable income. The retention of contributory advice and assistance will ensure that those on moderate incomes above income support level will continue to benefit from advice and assistance.

We intend to proceed with the changes to eligibility for civil legal aid as announced. The current eligibility criteria for criminal legal aid will remain unchanged.

These changes will ensure the achievement of our objective that reasonable access to legal aid continues to be provided for the most needy. Planned expenditure on legal aid is expected to rise by 40 per cent. over the next three years and more people than ever before are expected to be granted legal aid.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State has today written to all Scottish Members of Parliament explaining the revised proposals in more detail.

Greenock Prison

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there is to be a fatal accident inquiry concerning the recent death of a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison, Greenock; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 February 1993]: A fatal accident inquiry will be held into the death on 13 January 1993 of a prisoner in HM prison, Greenock although no date has yet been fixed. It would be improper to comment on the circumstances of the death until after the conclusion of the fatal accident inquiry.

Wood Products

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been for each year since 1979 (a) the cost of importing wood products and (b) the proportion of the total import costs represented by this figure.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 9 February 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The information is given in the following table.

1979	1,411	3·0
1980	1,282	2·6

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the domestic consumption of wood products each year since 1979.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 9 February 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is given in the following table. Comparable data for the years 1979 to 1981 are not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands continental shelf.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 16 February 1993, at column 119.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has provided a letter of comfort to the Falkland Islands Government in respect of the seismic survey activity in the Falkland Islands continental shelf of Geco-Prakla and Spectrum Energy and Information Technology Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 10 February 1993, at column 618.

Thailand

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British Government have urged the Government of Thailand to bring to justice those who are responsible for aiding or facilitating forced prostitution of women and children in that country, including both locals and foreign tourists who engage the services of child and other forced prostitutes.

Mr. Goodlad: Her Majesty's ambassador in Bangkok recently raised our concern about the problem of forced prostitution in Thailand, particularly of children, with the Thai Government. We will continue to encourage Thailand to take effective measures to tackle the problem.

Somalia and Kenya

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit by the Minister for Overseas Development to Somalia and Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In Somalia, my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development had discussions in Mogadishu, Baidoa and Hargeisa on the future prospects for relief and rehabilitation. She met key United Nations and United States officials engaged in "Operation Restore Hope" and representatives of British non-governmental organisations.

In Kenya, Baroness Chalker discussed political and economic issues with President Moi and other Kenyan leaders. She also visited a drought-affected district in the north-east to see relief and rehabilitation work.

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the MPLA in Angola regarding the detention and alleged maltreatment of UNITA officials and supporters.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our embassy in Luanda has regularly raised this issue with the Angolan Government, and has taken it up with President dos Santos. The treatment and future of all detainees, including those held by UNITA, is one of several questions which can only be resolved by dialogue between the two parties. We have urged both sides to meet as a matter of urgency to continue the talks begun in Addis Ababa on 27 January.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tools (Developing World)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much, in cash terms and as a percentage of the ODA budget, has been spent by the ODA in each of the last five years on tools for distribution to the developing world; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The supply of appropriate technology, including hand tools, forms an important part of many aid projects, both those we support directly and those managed by non-governmental organisations. Data about spending on hand tools are not collated centrally.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the total budget of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the British contribution by financial year since its formation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The European bank for reconstruction and development was inaugurated in April 1991. The information is as follows:

	Budget (ecu million)
1991	106·2

Members of the bank do not contribute directly to the budget; rather, they contribute to the bank's operating capital in direct proportion to their shareholding. The British shareholding is 8·5 per cent. worth 851·75 mecu, with a paid-in element of 30 per cent. over five years. Half is paid in cash and half in non-negotiable non-interest bearing promissory notes which are drawn down over three years. To date British capital subscription payments have been:

Capital subscription

Financial year	£stg million
1991-92	21·6
1992-93	31·8

As host country to the European bank for reconstruction and development, the British Government have additionally provided a grant of £40 million over three years to assist the European bank for reconstruction and development with the costs of establishing itself in London. This grant will be drawn down as follows:

United Kingdom grant

Financial year	£stg million
1991-92	12·5

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all of the countries eligible to borrow from the European bank for reconstruction and development, giving (a) the date on which they became eligible, (b) the total borrowed in each subsequent financial year to the latest available date and (c) any repayments made by financial year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table shows the value of loans and investments signed by the European bank for reconstruction and development for 60 projects in its countries of operation in the last two financial years together with the amounts disbursed.

Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan and Tajikistan are not full members of the EBRD as yet. Membership procedures are currently under way for the following.

Know-how Fund

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the countries covered by the know-how fund, giving (a) the date on which they became eligible for assistance and (b) the total spend for each subsequent financial year to the latest available.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund was launched in June 1989. The date on which countries became eligible for assistance and expenditure for these in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 are as follows.

Countries	Date eligible for assistance	1989-90 (£000)	1990-91 (£000)	1991-92 (£000)

Narmada Dam, India

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many people have been displaced by the Narmada dam project in India to date; and how many have been resettled;

(2) if he will make a statement on the mechanism for payment of compensation to each displaced person in connection with the Narmada dam project, India; and what information he has on the relative differentials in compensation to people displaced in Gujarat and in Madhya Pradesh;

(3) how much land each person displaced by the Narmada dam project and canal network receives; how many hectares of land have been allocated for displaced people; and if he will list the districts to which displaced people have been and will be located.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 4 February 1993]: A total of 5,500 families in Gujarat and Maharashtra have been resettled to date. Compensation mechanisms have been established, but compensation formulae differ from state to state depending on eligibility criteria. About 11,300 hectares of land have been allocated so far to those who have been displaced. My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will write to the hon. Member in more detail about his questions; copies of her letter will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Sick Leave)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, columns 126-28, if he will give the figures for days lost in each police force in England and Wales due to (a) assault-related sick leave and (b) sick leave not due to assaults in 1990 and 1991 expressed as an average per officer employed in the force at these dates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is as follows.

Police Funding

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to change the revenue grant system for police forces in England and Wales to one based on the allocation of grant on assessment of relative need.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering a range of issues connected with the police service, including future funding arrangements. How grant is allocated is clearly one aspect of this. He will announce his conclusions on funding in due course.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff of governor grade at the Wolds prison were previously employed at governor grade in the public prison sector.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A contracted-out prison is run by a director, not a governor. The director and the head of custody at Wolds remand prison were formerly employed by HM prison service in governor grades.

Police, North Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received relating to the establishment figure for the north Wales police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has received in the last 12 months six letters from hon. Members. My right hon. and noble Friend met a delegation last June to hear views about policing in Anglesey.

The establishment of the North Wales police was increased in April 1992 by 17 officers, bringing the establishment of the force up to 1,369. In common with other forces, North Wales has not had an increase approved for 1993-94.

Blakenhurst Prison

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects Blakenhurst prison to open.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 21 January, at column 330.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the newly appointed governor and deputy governor of Blakenhurst prison were earlier employed at governor grade in the public prison sector.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A contracted-out prison is run by a director not a governor. The director and deputy director of Blakenhurst prison were formerly employed by Her Majesty's prison service.

Police Numbers

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 862-63, if he will give the percentage of total employees in each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991 that the figures for civilian staff represent.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table.

Chief Constables (Tendering)

188. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances he would seek an independent inquiry into aspects of tendering procedures undertaken by chief constables.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In exceptional circumstances my right hon. and learned Friend may choose to exercise his residual power under section 32 of the Police Act 1964 to cause a local inquiry to be held. Anyone who believes that a police authority or a chief constable has acted improperly or unlawfully may bring legal action against them in the same way as they would against any other body.

Data Protection

189. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which EC countries have enacted legislation based on the requirements of the Council of Europe convention on data protection, and have also applied the convention to manual files or have included requirements for obtaining the prior consent of data subjects to the use of their personal information.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All EC countries with the exception of Greece have enacted legislation which meets the requirements of the Council of Europe convention for the protection of individuals with regard to automatic processing of personal data. I understand that in Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, the Netherlands, and Portugal, the legislation applies to manual files, as well as to computer files, either as a general rule or in some specific circumstances. I also understand that in Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Portugal, and Spain the data subject's consent is required in relation to the use either of all data or of sensitive data.

DNA Profiles

190. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation which would give a DNA profile the same status as a fingerprint for the purpose of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984; what consideration he has given to the comments on DNA profiles made by the Data Protection Registrar in his 1992 annual report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 29 October 1992, at column 765.

British Overseas Citizens

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his Department's policy on the deportation or removal of British overseas citizens remaining in the United Kingdom as overstayers;

(2) what instructions his Department has issued to immigration officials since 1974 specifically on the deportation or removal of British overseas citizens.

Mr. Charles Wardle: British overseas citizens are subject to immigration control and the provisions of the immigration rules in the same way as any other national. I am not aware that any instructions relating specifically to the deportation or removal of British overseas citizens have been issued to immigration officials since 1974.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notices of intention to deport have been issued since 1974 under the 1971 Act on British overseas citizens who remained in the United Kingdom as overstayers; and how many of those British overseas citizens issued with notices of intention to deport have been deported or removed from the United Kingdom since 1974.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Between 1987-91 no notices of intention to deport were served on British overseas citizens. In 1992, five notices of intention to deport were served on British overseas citizens of which four were for overstaying; so far one of these has made a supervised departure. This information is not readily available before 1987 and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ecstasy

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount of the drug Ecstasy seized in each year since 1987.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is contained in table 1.1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of drugs seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. Seizures of Ecstasy—MDMA—were not separately recorded before 1989.

Offenders, Waltham Forest

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of offenders appearing before the courts in the London borough of Waltham Forest were unemployed in each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(2) what percentage of offenders in the London borough of Waltham Forest were under 21 years old in the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: Information is not collected centrally on the employment status of defendants appearing before the courts. The table shows the number and percentage of offenders by age convicted at Waltham Forest petty sessional division and at the Crown Court who were committed by Waltham Forest petty sessional division 1989 to 1991, which is provisional. Information on cautioning is available for police force areas.

Sheffield Community Literacy Team

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why no bids were invited from Sheffield local education authority in respect of section 11 grant for the community literacy team.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Sheffield city council successfully applied for section 11 grant for its community literacy team project on the last occasion on which local authorities were invited to submit applications. Sheffield's application on that occasion related to the continuation of activities already being funded under the grant. Approval previously given in December 1990 was on the clear understanding that, in the particular circumstances of the case, grant would not be paid beyond 31 March 1993.

Vehicle Entry Devices

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 198, if he will consider introducing a sale by licence system for vehicle entry devices so that only those who have legitimate use may purchase them.

Mr. Jack: As I explained in the answer that I gave to the question from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 3 February, the Government have no plans at present to control the sale of vehicle entry devices, either through licensing their sale or otherwise. We will, however, keep the situation under review.

Ram Raiding

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many robberies involving ram raiding have taken place in each police authority area for each year since 1987.

Mr. Jack: The requested information is not available centrally.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of employees in his Department are registered disabled.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 1 July 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, 185 members of staff in the Home Office were registered disabled, representing 0·4 per cent. of all staff. The Department employs many other people with disabilities who have chosen not to register, but no record has been kept of such staff.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is estimated that since 1979 there has been a reduction of about 700 staff in the Home Office as a result of contracting out. There have not been any reductions on these grounds in staff of the executive agencies in the Department since they were established.

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of statutory instruments laid before Parliament by my Department in each of the years 1980 to 1992 is as follows:

	Number
1980	57
1981	36
1982	55
1983	52
1984	34
1985	61
1986	66
1987	61
1988	53
1989	51
1990	53
1991	59

Drug Offenders (Asset Seizures)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the value of (a) money and (b) assets that have been confiscated from people convicted by courts in England and Wales for drug offences in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: The number of offenders ordered to pay confiscation orders under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 and the total amount confiscated from 1989 to 1991—figures for 1991 are provisional—are given in the table. Information collected centrally shows only the value of orders made.

Assaults

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of causing actual bodily harm and of common assault were recorded in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: For notifiable offence purposes, offences of assault occasioning actual bodily harm are included within the "other wounding" offence classification which generally includes all offences of wounding which do not endanger life. The number of offences in this classification for the last five years were as follows:

	Number
1987	129,193
1988	144,781
1989	162,843
1990	169,764
1991	174,245

In addition, there were 686 notifiable offences of assault in 1987 and 503 in 1988. Following the Criminal Justice Act 1988, these assaults became summary offences and as such they are no longer collected centrally for the notifiable offence series.

Prosecutions

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) cautions as alternatives to prosecution and (b) prosecutions in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: Information for 1989 to 1991, which is provisional, is given in the table.

Prisons (Utility Costs)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average weekly cost per inmate of providing gas, electricity and water at (a) local and (b) remand prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The average weekly cost per inmate of providing gas, electricity and water in 1991-92 was as follows:

(a) Local prisons	6·69
(b) Remand centres[1]	7·04

HOME DEPARTMENT

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 15 February 1993]: Market testing within the Home Office covers the following areas:

Accommodation and Office Services
Computing Services
Internal Audit
Pay Services
Police Nationals Computer (Hendon Data Centre)
Prison Service
College, Training and facilities management
Computing Services
Dog Services
Prison Establishments
Canteens (prisoners' shops)
Warehousing, Distribution and fleet management

In addition the provision of prison education is the subject of competitive tender.

Work on market testing these projects is under way, but has not been completed.

Police Officers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed police officers were in post, and what was the number of (a) reported incidents, (b) burglaries of all types and (c) offences of taking vehicles without the owner's consent per officer in each police authority in 1979, 1980, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 2 February 1993]: The available information is given in the tables. Information for 1992 is not yet available. Statistics are not held separately on the number of uniformed officers.

Prisoners (Self-Injury)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attempted suicides took place in prisons in England and Wales in 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 January 1993]: There were 2,920 incidents of deliberate self harm by prisoners in prisons in England and Wales in 1992. No distinction is made according to the degree of apparent suicidal intent.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 16 February 1993]: None.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basis the formula in paragraph 3 of appendix B to the special grant support report (No. 5) was arrived at; and whether this formula will be applied to expenditure by local authorities incurred and notified to his Department after 8 January.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have been asked to reply.

The formula for the payment of Yugoslav displaced persons grant in respect of 1992-93 expenditure is the same as would apply under the Bellwin scheme of special financial assistance for emergencies. The threshold under the Bellwin scheme is calculated as an amount per head of relevant population (as defined in schedule 12A of the Local Government Act 1988). Different thresholds apply for different classes of authority, reflecting their responsibilities for different services. Only those authorities named in the "Special Grant Report (No. 5)" will be eligible for grant and their entitlement will not exceed the amount specified in the report. A fresh scheme will apply for 1993-94.

Blyth Valley

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of persons registered in Blyth Valley on an electoral register and community charge register.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have been asked to reply.

The latest information available to the Department is that there were 61,701 persons in Blyth valley on the electoral register in February 1992 and 58,459 persons on the community charge register in September 1991 who were subject to a personal community charge on 1 June 1991. The electoral register will include some people who were exempt from payment of the community charge.

Yugoslav Displaced Persons Grant

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basis Aylesbury Vale, Rochford and Uttlesford were awarded Yugoslav displaced persons grant; which authorities were turned down in their applications for such grants; how many refugees each authority accepted; and how much unreimbursed expenditure each incurred.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have been asked to reply.

Yugoslav displaced persons grant is paid on qualifying expenditure above a threshold. Local authorities were invited to submit estimates of the expenditure they had incurred or expected to incur during 1992-93. Sixty-one local authorities did so, as listed in the table. The table also shows the threshold which applies in each case. Only Aylesbury Vale, Rochford and Uttlesford district councils exceeded their respective thresholds. No figures are available centrally on the numbers of refugees accepted by each authority.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Employees

113. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of employees in her Department is registered disabled.

117. Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 3·3 per cent. at 1 July 1992, the latest date for which figures are available. The Department also employs other people with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Disabled People (Employment)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will issue a Green Paper on employment for disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam) on 26 January 1993, Official Report, column 659.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances it is her Department's policy to invoke prosecutions of employers under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 February 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State believes that every effort should be made to educate and persuade employers to adopt positive employment policies towards disabled people and thereby comply with the Act.

Officials will therefore seek to resolve such matters by negotiation and advice wherever possible. Where this is unsuccessful or inappropriate, prosecution will be considered on the basis of the circumstances of the case, the strength of the evidence and the public policy interest.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) under what circumstances an employer would be refused an application for bulk permits to employ people not registered disabled;

(2) how many applications for bulk permits to employ people not registered disabled have been refused in the last 15 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 February 1993]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Eric Illsley, dated 17 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Questions to her about bulk permits. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

A bulk permit would be refused if my local Disability Employment Adviser considered that sufficient suitably qualified registered disabled people are likely to be available to fill the employers vacancies.

A bulk permit would also be refused where the employer fails to show they will take reasonable steps towards recruiting suitable registered disabled people. The permit is issued on the understanding the employer will notify vacancies to the Jobcentre and will consider sympathetically the engagement of any suitable registered disabled people.

I regret I am unable to say how many bulk permits have been refused in the last fifteen years as such information is not held centrally.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many campaigns the Government have organised in the last 15 years to encourage disabled people to register their disabilities with her Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 February 1993]: We have not run any specific campaign to encourage disabled people to register under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944. However disability employment advisers in local jobcentres provide disabled people with information about registering as disabled.

Sheltered Employment

311. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of funding allocated to the sheltered employment programme and the sheltered placement scheme for the next financial year; and if she will provide comparable figures for each of the last two years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The level of employment service funding for the sheltered employment programme, which includes Remploy is shown in the table:

Total programme	122,445,000	137,870,000	140,297,000
Of which sheltered placement scheme	18,763,000	18,533,000	19,635,000

Sheltered Workshops

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees were in sheltered workshops, excluding Remploy Ltd., at the latest available date and at a year before that date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 17 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about employees in sheltered workshops. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The latest available statistics providing numbers employed in sheltered workshops, excluding Remploy Ltd., that are supported by the Employment Service's Sheltered Employment Programme relate to the end of December 1992. The information you asked for is given in the attached annex.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Annex

Employees in sheltered workshops

	December 1992	December 1991
People with severe disabilities	4,922	5,125
Non-disabled people	1,629	1,602
TOTALS	6,551	6,727

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all those non-departmental public bodies, for which her Department is responsible, which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The Health and Safety Executive is the only non-departmental public body for which my Department has responsibility that has the power to require compliance with legislation which may be at the cost of others. The HSE does not make any charges for the work it undertakes in securing compliance with the legislation by others. It does however charge under regulations for approvals, licences etc. and by agreement for publications and certain services.

Transfer of Undertakings Regulations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the transfer of undertakings directive applies to takeovers by companies based in other EC countries of a British company.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 have the effect of continuing certain statutory and contractual rights of employees when an undertaking is transferred from one employer to another. It is immaterial whether the employer in the United Kingdom is or becomes controlled by a company in another country within or outside the EC.

DEFENCE

Warships

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the proportion of warship-building capacity that is state-owned in (a) France, (b) the Netherlands, (c) Belgium, (d) Italy and (e) Germany.

Mr. Aitken: My Department does not maintain records on the ownership of defence industrial capacity in other countries. However, on the information available to me, I understand that almost all of the warshipbuilding capacity in France and Italy is, effectively, state owned, while that in Germany, the Netherlands and Belgium is not.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on current Independent European Programme Group-Western European Union arrangements for reciprocal purchasing in the field of warship hulls.

Mr. Aitken: Efforts by the Independent European Programme Group nations, which now all participate in the Western European Union, to open progressively the European market for defence equipment have not extended to warship hulls.

UNPROFOR II

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which major unit has been warned off to relieve 1st Battalion the Cheshire Regiment as part of UNPROFOR II; when that unit last undertook an emergency tour, and where; from which other units reinforcements to that battalion will be drawn; when they last completed an emergency tour and where; whether soldiers from reinforcing units are trained to operate with Warrior armoured vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: 1 Prince of Wales Own Regiment from Osnabruck will replace 1 Cheshire Regiment, currently forming the basis of our battalion group in Bosnia, in May 1993. The Prince of Wales Own Regiment will be augmented by a platoon of Gordon Highlanders from Berlin; a platoon of the Queen's Lancashire Regiment from Berlin; and a platoon of 1 Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders from Minden.

Other units of the present battalion group will be replaced by a squadron of Light Dragoons from Hohne —to replace the squadron from 9/12 Lancers—and elements of 21 Engineer Regiment from Nienburg—to replace elements of 35 Engineer Regiment. Soldiers from units deploying are trained to work with Warrior armoured vehicles.

It is not possible to say where the earmarked individuals and their sub-units undertook their last emergency tour, but the last emergency tour details of the regiments from which the units are drawn are as follows:

Regiment	Last emergency tour Where	When
1 Prince of Wales Own Regiment	Belfast	November 1991—May 1992
Gordon Highlanders	Northern Ireland	January 1990—July 1990
Queen's Lancashire Regiment	Northern Ireland	February 1987—August 1987
1 Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders	Northern Ireland	March 1992—July 1992
Light Dragoons:
13/18th Hussars	Cyprus	August 1991—February 1992
15/19th Hussars	UNFICYP Roulement Regiment	December 1991—January 1992
21 Engineer Regiment	Northern Ireland	March 1992—September 1992

HMS Calpe

87. Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current role, annual cost and strength of the headquarters unit at HMS Calpe, Gibraltar; when he intends to close it; how and by whom its wartime task will be fulfilled henceforth; what role HMS Calpe played in the seatrain during Operation Granby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current role of HMS Calpe is to provide Royal Naval Reserve personnel to undertake naval control of shipping duties. The unit also provides additional operational support to the Commander British Forces Gibraltar including some augmentation to the manning of the maritime headquarters in periods of tension and war. The annual cost of the unit is £180,000. The strength is 21 officers, 56 ratings and three civilians. HMS Calpe will close by 31 March 1993. In future, the naval control of shipping tasks will be undertaken by staff deployed from the United Kingdom should the need arise. Tasks previously undertaken by RNR personnel serving in the maritime headquarters will now be undertaken by service personnel using modern visual aids and computers. HMS Calpe was not involved in the seatrain during Operation Granby.

Royal Naval Reserve

90. Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the RNR sea training centre at HMS Graham, Glasgow is to close; at what annual savings; what is the current RNR strength; what was the rate of usage of HMS Dovey over the last full year for which figures are available; what plans he has for her future use; what seagoing alternatives are to be available for RNR volunteers from the west of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Subject to consultation with the trades unions, it is proposed that HMS Graham will close by 1 October 1993 with annual savings of £150,000. Its current Royal Naval Reserve strength is 90 officers and 200 ratings. The usage of HMS Dovery during the calendar year 1992 was as follows:

	Days	Per cent.
Time at Sea	75	20·5
Planned Maintenance	30	8·2
Unscheduled Maintenance	70	19·2
Harbour Training	22	6·0
Leave (RN personnel)	42	11·5
Berthed	126	34·6

Note: Total Distance Run—11,672 nautical miles

HMS Dovey will be transferred to the RNR headquarters unit, HMS Dalriada, Greenock. Arrangements have been made for RNR volunteers from the west coast of Scotland to conduct their sea training activities from HMS Dalriada.

Mercenary Soldiers

88. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he takes to prevent those known to have been mercenary soldiers enlisting in regular or territorial forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no specific bar to prevent anyone who has served as a mercenary from enlisting into the regular or reserve forces. Information about an applicant's service as a mercenary should normally be revealed during the selection process and each would be considered on its own merits.

Electromagnetic Radiation

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (a) make and (b) model of each type of equipment in use by the military in border areas of Northern Ireland which emits electromagnetic radiation; and if he will indicate details of emissions in each case.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 26, if he will publish similar figures showing the value of the basic retirement pension and state earnings-related pension based on the assumption of earnings uprating, including estimates for 1993-94 (a) expressed as a proportion of average earnings and (b) showing what the monetary equivalents would be if the proportions were applied to estimated average earnings in 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is given in the tables.

Retirement pension as a proportion of average earnings (per cent.)

	1993-94	2015-16	2025-26	2035-36	2045-46
Basic pension	16·9	16·9	16·9	16·9	16·9
Average AP (women)	10·6	12·9	11·5	11·4	11·4
Average AP (men)	17·0	20·2	17·9	16·7	16·7

Proportions applied to 1993-94 average earnings (£ per week)

	1993-94	2015-16	2025-26	2035-36	2045-46
Basic pension	56·10	56·10	56·10	56·10	56·10
Average AP (women)	34·95	42·80	38·15	37·90	37·90
Average AP (men)	56·45	67·00	59·25	55·45	55·35

Notes:

1. Amounts rounded to nearest 5p.
2. Assumes that LEL, UEL and Basic RP increase in line with earnings from April 1994.
3. AP represents the Additional Pension of an individual on average earnings in each year of his working life.

Carers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to consult carers and their representatives organisations concerning the income needs of carers.

Mr. Scott: We consider carefully all representations made from and on behalf of carers.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research work has been undertaken by his Department to date to evaluate the costs of caring.

Mr. Scott: This Department helps to sponsor a number of large-scale surveys that collect data about the financial circumstances of carers. These include:

British Household Panel Study
Family Resources Survey and General Household Survey.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to (a) raise the level of invalid care allowance to that of the basic state pension and (b) raise the level of income support carer premium to that of a pensioner premium for a person aged under 75 years; and if he will indicate the estimated costs of implementing both (a) and (b).

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

The estimated costs, at 1992-93 prices and benefit levels are:

(a) £156 million
(b) £15 million[1]

[1] Figure rounded to the nearest £5 million and does not include housing benefit and community charge benefit costs.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy for the Benefits Agency to establish a dedicated advice line for carers.

Mr. Scott: Operational matters are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 16 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if the Agency will establish a dedicated advice line for carers.

The Agency is committed to providing both an efficient and effective service accessible to all our customers. To this end, specific consideration has been given to people with disabilities and those who care for them, and a number of initiatives have been set up.

With the success of the general Freeline service a number of similar services were introduced including the Benefit Enquiry Line (BEL). This provides advice and information to people with disabilities as well as to the people who care for them. It is also able to assist with the completion of claim forms over the telephone. At present, forms can be completed for visually impaired customers in braille or large print. However, as a development of the BEL, a full form completion service covering the full range of benefits for people with disabilities and their carers will be introduced in April this year. The benefits covered will include Disability Living Allowance, Disability Working Allowance, Attendance Allowance, Severe Disablement Allowance and Invalid Care Allowance.

With carers being catered for by the Benefit Enquiry Line the Agency does not have any plans, at this stage, to establish a further advice line.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Scott: The available information is shown in the table. Information relating to previous years is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

	Statutory Instruments Laid
1991	79
1992	72

Vibration White Finger

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for benefit in respect of vibration white finger were made in each of the past six years in (a) Benefits Agency offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and how many of these applications led to the payment of such benefits.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Asbestosis

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to allow persons suffering from asbestosis or related ailments who are in receipt of income support or other social security incomes, to be provided with independent medical examinations free of charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: An independent medical examination may be arranged, and paid for, by the Department where it is considered necessary for the purposes of determining entitlement to benefit. Reports of such examinations may be copied free of charge to claimants on request, to the extent that they do not contain harmful information. We have no plans to arrange other independent medical examinations free of charge.

Mr. Black, Greenock

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. Black of Greenock, can expect to receive information concerning the reference back of his case, for second-tier adjudication, made by social security commissioner Douglas Reith on 19 October 1992—commissioner's file No. CSA/95/92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Following the commissioner's decision on 19 October 1992 Mr. Black's case has received second-tier adjudication and Mr. Black was advised of the outcome on 12 November 1992. Another copy of the findings have been sent to Mr. Black.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to resolve the attendance allowance claim of Mrs. June Stanley—NI number YE 25 22 49 C—outstanding from February 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write shortly to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 16 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions raised about relevant operational matters. I am therfore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about when he will take steps to resolve the Attendance Allowance claim of Mrs. June Stanley which is outstanding from February 1992.

A decision on Mrs. Stanley's Attendance Allowance claim was made on 21 January 1992 and a further review decision on 15 June 1992. Mrs. Stanley subsequently appealed on 1 September against the review decision and arrangements are now being made for a Disability Appeal Tribunal to consider her appeal. I have written to you separately and in greater detail about this matter.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Benefits Agency (Leeds)

163. Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of replies from the Benefits Agency in Leeds to customer queries is within 20 working days; and what percentage of such replies have taken six months or over, during the past 12 month period.

Mr. Burt: The arrangements for reply to correspondence to the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms. Mildred Gordon, dated 15 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent parliamentary question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the time taken to respond to correspondence by the Benefits Agency in Leeds.

You ask what percentage of letters in the past twelve month period have been cleared within 20 working days and what percentage took six months or over to reply. The information for 1992 is as follows:

		Per cent.
Total replies to Members from Chief Executive:	4,461	(100)
of which,
Replied within 20 working days	1,274	(29)
Reply took 6 months or more	32	(0·7)

I very much regret that the Benefits Agency has not recently been meeting its target for responding to Members' letters and that some very long delays have occurred. As I explained in my letter to you of 27 January on an individual case you had raised, the delays are due to the backlog of correspondence that has built up in the Disability Living Allowance Unit following the greater than expected workload faced by the Unit in the early months of the DLA scheme.

The delay in replying to Members' letters about DLA does not, of course, mean that action is not proceeding on a customer's claim. In fact in most cases where there is a long outstanding reply the claim will have been resolved much earlier. You will recall that in the case discussed in my letter of 27 January, full benefit entitlement was paid in September 1992. I understand this followed contact you had with the special Hotline telephone enquiry service for Members I have set up at the DLA Unit. But clearly you should have had a reply to your letter from me much sooner than you did and I apologise for this.

A recovery plan for clearing the backlog of correspondence at the DLA Unit is now in operation with a view to substantially reducing the number of letters awaiting reply by the end of this month. Once the backlog is cleared it will be our aim to respond to all future correspondence on DLA within the Agency's target of twenty working days, as is already the case for correspondence about other subjects.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Assistance

17. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of regional assistance grants paid to businesses in Knowsley in each of the past three years.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the three years to the end of March 1992 my Department supported in the Knowsley area 41 projects with regional selective assistance; 69 projects with regional development grants—the revised scheme—and 54 projects with regional enterprise grants.

I will publish a more detailed breakdown of these grants in the Official Report.

In addition, I am announcing this afternoon a grant of £799,000 to Kodak to extend its Acornfield road factory on the Knowsley industrial park.

Number of projects in the local authority district of Knowsley supported by RSA, RDG, or REG 1989-90 to 1991-92

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
RSA project grants	15	13	13
Revised RDG	48	14	7
REG	12	20	22

Pâté de Foie Gras

18. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to ban the import of pâté de foie gras into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No.

Free Flight Offers

19. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps he has taken to regulate free flight offers which accompany the sale of goods or services.

24. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps he has taken to regulate free flight offers which accompany the sale of goods or services.

Mr. Leigh: I have no evidence that such offers are other than bona fide sales promotions and have no plans for specific regulation of them.

Deregulation

20. Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he proposes to monitor deregulation throughout Whitehall.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Progress under the deregulation initiative in all regulatory departments is co-ordinated and monitored by the central deregulation unit in my Department. As the Minister with particular responsibility, for the initiative, I take an active lead in liaising with deregulation Ministers in other Departments and monitoring their activities.

Railway Rolling Stock

21. Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what help his Department is giving British railway rolling stock manufacturing.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department supports the UK railway equipment manufacturers under its schemes of regional selective assistance, innovation and export promotion. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in the autumn statement additional measures to release £150 million for rolling stock orders by British Rail. In addition, he announced the Government's continuing commitment to the Jubilee line extension.

Coal Mines (Wales)

22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state, on the basis of the latest information available to him, what are the prospects for each of the four remaining coal mines in Wales; and what discussions he has had with the NCB of plans for the sinking of new mines in Wales.

Mr. Eggar: Betws and Taff Merthyr are the subject of a consultation process currently being conducted by British Coal. Point of Ayr is being considered in the context of the coal review.

We have had no discussions with British Coal about opening new mines in Wales.

Japanese-owned Plants

23. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the benefits to United Kingdom industry of experience of working practices in Japanese-owned plants in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department keeps a watching brief on all relevant aspects of inward investment. I am particularly encouraged by the experience of Japanese investors in adapting their own working practices to UK circumstances. I have also noted that a number of UK companies have learnt from these practices.

Ireland (Market Development Fund)

25. Mr. Trimble: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has received from the European Commission with regard to his representations on the Republic of Ireland's market development fund.

Mr. Needham: As a result of representations made to the European Commission a number of important changes were made to the initial proposal so as to minimise the potential impact on United Kingdom businesses. The scheme is confined to companies employing fewer than 250 people and whose turnover does not exceed 20 mecu. Companies which are more than one quarter owned by one or more larger companies are ineligible. The aid is limited for a maximum of six months and will end in March 1993. The scheme can also be suspended if the average rate of sterling against the Irish pound closes below parity within any working week. I understand the Commission has ruled out any extension.

Pit Closures

26. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his latest proposals regarding coal mine closures.

Mr. Heseltine: We are engaged in a wide-ranging review of the prospects for 21 of the pits proposed for closure by British Coal, in the context of the Government's energy policy. We will shortly be publishing a White Paper setting out the results of that review, which will then be debated by the House.

Steel Exports (USA)

27. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to protect steel exports to the United States of America.

Mr. Heseltine: I raised this subject with Barbara Franklin, the then United States Secretary of Commerce, by letter on 11 December. I have also written to her successor, Ron Brown, urging him to focus on these matters at the earliest opportunity.

The issue was raised at the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 February, when the United Kingdom joined other member states in condemning the United States actions as unacceptable. As a result the Community has requested formal consultations with the United States in accordance with the GATT subsidies code.

In addition, the EC fully supported Brazil in its denunciation of the United States decisions at the GATT Council on 9 February.

Timeshare Companies

28. Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps he is taking to protect consumers against disreputable timeshare companies.

Mr. Leigh: The EC Commission has submitted a draft directive on timeshare to the Council of Ministers. The United Kingdom is seeking to secure the early adoption of this directive.

Gas (Exempt Supplies) Act 1993

29. Mr. Duncan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the entry into force of the Gas (Exempt Supplies) Act 1993.

Mr. Eggar: We have made it clear that the Gas (Exempt Supplies) Act 1993 will not come into force until the Health and Safety Commission has had sufficient time to put appropriate safety arrangements in place. We therefore plan to bring the Act into force once revisions to the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984 are in place, probably early in 1994.

One-stop Shops

30. Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress his Department is making towards setting up one-stop shops.

Mr. Heseltine: A total of 57 partnerships have submitted bids for funding pilot one-stop shops. Many of these bids cover wide geographical areas and make proposals for establishing one-stop shops in more than one local area. This is an excellent response. I intend to announce the winning bids by the end of March.

Steel Exports (USA)

31. Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government in relation to penal tariffs on the importation of steel into the United States of America.

Mr. Heseltine: I raised this with Barbara Franklin, the then United States Secretary of Commerce, by letter on 11 December. I have also written to her successor, Ron Brown, urging him to focus on these matters at the earliest opportunity.

Post Office

32. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the current value of the assets of the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh: The value of the Post Office's net assets at 27 September 1992, as reported in the 1992-93 half-year results, was £2,205 million.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Crown post offices have been closed in each of the last five years; and what number of Crown post offices there are expected to be by the end of 1993.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 February 1993]: The figures requested are as follows:

Year	Number of Crown office closures
1987-88	4
1988-89	6
1989-90	154
1990-91	172
1991-92	148
Up to 31 January 1993	57
Total	541

These outlets have been replaced by 529 new agency-operated outlets which offer the full range of transactions and in many cases extended hours of opening. The Post Office will continue to review the opportunities for conversion of Crown offices to agency status throughout 1993.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) franchised post offices and (b) non-franchised sub-post offices there are expected to be by the end of 1993.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 February 1993]: There are at present 53 franchise post offices and 18,974 sub-post offices in operation. The Post Office will review opportunities for further franchise offices as they arise throughout 1993 and some modest increase can be expected. The number of sub-post offices is expected to be broadly similar at the end of 1993, although closures occur from time to time as a result of local circumstances. The Government are committed to the maintenance of a nationwide network of post offices.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) crown post offices and (b) sub-post offices have become franchised sub-post offices in each of the last five years.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 February 1993]: Since 1990 42 Crown offices have been converted to franchise status operating in major retail outlets such as supermarkets and newsagents. Five existing sub-post offices have been upgraded to franchise status. There have also been six openings of franchise offices in entirely new locations. No franchise offices were opened before 1990.

Motor Industry (Energy Strategy)

33. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet motor manufacturers to discuss the implications for the motor industry of his revised energy strategy.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Coal Industry

34. Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce his plans for the future of the coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I hope to set out the Government's plans for the future of the coal industry in a White Paper to be published later this month.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the cost of continued pumping at pits in the Durham coalfield was taken into account (a) before the announcement of the proposed closures and (b) in the recent review of their viability.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 15 February 1993]: The factors which British Coal considered before making its announcement of proposed pit closures on 13 October are a matter for the corporation. The studies by John T. Boyd Company of pits proposed for closure have taken account of the costs of pumping at those pits.

United States of America

35. Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on trade with the United States of America.

Mr. Heseltine: The United States is our largest trading partner outside Europe and our trading relationship is therefore of the greatest significance. I have already conveyed to my counterparts in the new Administration the importance I attach to finding constructive solutions to the current EC-US bilateral issues, particularly in the steel and vehicles sector, and in bringing the Uruguay round to a successful conclusion. The position adopted by the EC Commission in its talks last week with the United States Administration on these matters has our full support.

The reviving United States economy provides considerable opportunities for British companies in the United States. I hope shortly to announce a major new campaign to encourage our exporters to seize these opportunities.

Postage Stamps (Royal Emblems)

36. Ms. Hoey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to the future use of royal emblems on postage stamps in connection with his proposals to privatise the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh: The review of Post Office organisation and structure is not yet complete. No decision has been taken to privatise the Post Office. Full consideration is being given to all relevant issues.

Arms Conversion

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to consult the Secretary of the National Steering Committee of Nuclear Free Zone Local Authorities about arms conversion.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Laboratories (Expenditure)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the expenditure of (a) the Warren Spring Laboratory, (b) the National Engineering Laboratory, (c) the National Physical Laboratory and (d) the Laboratory of the Government Chemist in each year since 1989; what is the projected expenditure for the next three years; and how much income was generated from (i) Government sources outside his Department and (ii) non-Government sources since 1989.

Mr. Leigh: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executives of the four agencies concerned. I have therefore asked Dr. Richard Worswick, Laboratory of Government Chemist; Mr. William Edgar, National Engineering Laboratory; Dr. Peter Clapham, National Physical Laboratory; and Dr. Doug Cormack, Warren Spring Laboratory, to arrange for replies to be given.

Letter from Dr. D. Cormack to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 10 February 1993:

I am replying to your question to the President of the Board of Trade in respect of Warren Spring Laboratory. The figures are as follows:

	Vote expenditure £ million
1989-90	10·3
1990-91	11·7
1991-92	12·7
1992-93	13·0
1993-94	13·0
1994-95	14·0
1995-96	14·0

£ million

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	[1] 1992-93
Vote income from:
OGDs	4·2	5·4	6·8	6·4
Non-Government	1·8	1·9	3·0	3·1

[1] The figures for 1992-93 are the latest forecast outturn.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 12 February 1993:

The information you asked for is as follows:

	Gross expenditure £ million	Income from Government sources excluding DTI £ million	Income from non-Government sources £ million
Year to 31 March
90—Actual	19·6	0·4	4·0
91—Actual	18·2	0·3	4·3
92—Actual	17·8	0·5	6·1
93—Forecast	23·3	0·5	6·0
94—Projected	23·5
95—Projected	24·5
96—Projected	25·1

I trust this meets your requirements.

Letter from Peter Clapham to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 11 February 1993:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question, asking the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the expenditure of (a) the Warren Spring Laboratory, (b) the National Engineering Laboratory, (c) the National Physical Laboratory and (d) the Laboratory of the Government Chemist in each year since 1989; what is the projected expenditure for the next three years and how much income was generated from (i) government sources outside his Department and (ii) non government sources since 1989.

I have been asked to reply in respect of the Agency for which I am responsible, the National Physical Laboratory.

The historic information requested is as follows:

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Expenditure	35	40	44
Income from
(i) government sources outside DTI	0·6	0·7	0·6
(ii) non government sources	4·2	4·4	6·2

The latest published projections of gross expenditure for the current year and the next three years are as follows:

£ million

1992-93 (estimated outturn)	1993-94	1994-95	1995-96
47	48	53	56

However, it is likely that the projections for 1994-95 and beyond will need to be revised downwards in the light of reductions in the budgets available to our major customers.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 12 February 1993:

As Chief Executive I am replying to this question in respect of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist (LGC), an Executive Agency since 30 October 1989.

From 1 April 1990 LGC has been subject to net running cost control. It is expected to finance current expenditure (including capital charges) from income from payments by customers, principally Government Departments (including the Department of Trade and Industry), for work commissioned. LGC undertakes work for customers on a full economic cost basis.

Against this background, the details you requested about LGC's Vote Expenditure and Receipts are as follows:

Table 1: Expenditure

1989-90	10·2
1990-91	11·0
1991-92	12·8
1992-93	16·5
1993-94	16·7
1994-95	17·5
1995-96	17·3

Table 2: Receipts

	Government sources outside DTI £ million	Non-Government sources £ million
1989-90	7·0	0·6
1990-91	7·8	1·0
1991-92	7·1	1·0
1992-93[1]	7·2	1·0

Note:

[1] The figures for 1992-93 are based on the latest income forecasts for the present financial year.

I hope this information is helpful.

Coal Imports

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates he has made of the change in the price of imported coal in 1992 due to currency fluctuations.

Mr. Eggar: Based on figures of spot purchases of coal delivered to Europe, published by the International Coal Report, the sterling price of imported coal declined from 93p per gigajoule in January 1992 to 74p per GJ in September, mainly due to a decline in the dollar price of imported coal. The price increased to 92p per GJ in December due to the exchange rate changes.

Manufactures

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the manufactured products which have ceased to be manufactured in the United Kingdom since 1980.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are a number of sources of information on manufacturing products, but none is sufficiently comprehensive to allow for an accurate answer.

KissLine

Mr. Dickens: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken in connection with the KissLine telephone service; and what steps are being taken to prevent such services from being advertised in children's comics.

Mr. Leigh: The Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services sets and reviews standards relating to premium rate telephone services through the ICSTIS code of practice. ICSTIS recognises that children are a vulnerable audience for premium rate services and the code of practice contains a number of measures which help to protect children and their parents. Children's services must not, for example, include references to practices that a reasonable parent would not wish his or her child to hear or learn about in this way.

ICSTIS has considered the children's service entitled "Kissing: All the Secrets" and has decided that the content of the service was so mild that the appearance of an advertisement for it in a children's comic did not breach the ICSTIS code of practice.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the lack of staff representation on the interim creditor committee of BCCI.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Such representations have been received from the hon. Member for Leicester, East and from members of the BCCI campaign committee.

Insolvency Act

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many individual voluntary arrangements under part VIII of the Insolvency Act 1986 have been notified to his Department in each of the last three years for which records are available; what is the total value of debt written off in this fashion over this period; how many businesses have thereby been thus enabled to continue trading; and how many creditors have suffered irrecoverable losses as a result of the operation of this part of the Act.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of individual voluntary arrangements in each year are published on my Department's behalf in "Business Briefing" by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, copies of which are available in the Library. The further information sought by the hon. Member is not maintained and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Coe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he considers that Cornwall should be eligible for grants from the European structural funds.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. The Government believe that Northern Ireland, the highlands and islands, Merseyside, Devon and Cornwall, rural Wales and South Yorkshire should be eligible for grants under objective 1 of these funds.

Industrial Strategy

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's industrial strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 71, and the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 27 January 1993, Official Report, column 735.

Dounreay

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of Dounreay.

Mr. Eggar: The prototype fast reactor at Dounreay is due to cease operation on 31 March 1994, after which decommissioning operations will commence. Other decomissioning and radioactive waste management operations already under way will continue for some time to come. Dounreay is also the base of the Atomic Energy Authority's fuel services business. Future commercial activities there are a matter for the AEA.

Hospital Radio

Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what discussions have taken place between his Department and the National Association of Hospital Broadcasting Organisations regarding the allocation of an FM frequency for hospital broadcasting services;

(2) whether the use of a freely radiating FM frequency will be made available to hospital broadcasting services.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave on 9 February 1993, Official Report, column 569.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table of information showing for regions of the United Kingdom, with Greater London shown as a separate region, the number of VAT registrations and de-registrations for each year since 1979.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 February 1993]: Regional estimates of VAT registratio:ns and deregistrations, for the years 1980 to 1991, were published in CSO bulletin (5/93) on 15 January 1993, a copy of which is available in the Library.

International Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the IAEA meeting in Oslo from 1 to 5 February on dumping in the Kara and Barents seas.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The meeting was held under the joint auspices of the International Atomic Energy Authority, the Norwegian Radiation Protection Authority and the Federal Hydrometeorological Committee of Russia. Officials from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and from the Ministry of Defence attended.

The meeting launched "The International Arctic Seas Assessment Project (IASAP) 1993-95", a scientific programme designed to assess the implications for human health and the environment of radioactive wastes dumped in the Kara and Barents seas by the former Soviet Union and to consider any necessary remedial action. I welcome the co-operation being offered by the Russian authorities and look forward to seeing the results of this investigation.

WALES

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) which company won the contract for printing the brochure, "Grant-maintained Schools—Questions Staff Ask"; if the contract was open to competitive tender; and what was the total cost of production and distribution;

(2) which company won the contract for printing the brochure, "Grant-maintained Schools—Questions Parents Ask"; if the contract was open to competitive tender; and what was the total cost of production and distribution;

(3) which company won the contract for printing the brochure, "How to become a Grant-maintained School"; for school governors; if the contract was open to competitive tender; and what was the cost of production and distribution.

Sir Wyn Roberts: These booklets were produced for the Welsh Office by the Central Office of Information and details relating to their production are a matter for the chief executive of COI. The production and distribution cost of each booklet cannot be separately identified as all three were produced together. The cost of producing and distributing all booklets was £23,900.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. David Hunt: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is currently undertaken by his Department to ensure that local authorities fulfil obligations outlined in section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We expect local authorities to be well aware of their statutory duties under section 2(1) of the 1970 Act, to provide a range of services for disabled people, where they accept that there is an assessed need. Each case is assessed on its own merits and the decision as to the kind of assistance to be provided is for the local authority to make, being best placed to judge an individual's needs. The Department receives annual returns and, as appropriate, follows up specific cases referred to the Department, where it is alleged that a local authority is in breach of its statutory duties.

Mental Illness

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what new money and transitional funding he has allocated to each county in Wales in respect of the all-Wales mental illness strategy 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will allocate extra funding to the all-Wales mental illness strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The allocation has been announced of an extra £1·2 million for 1993-94, in addition to what is required to maintain existing projects. The distribution of the allocation has yet to be decided. Discussions are continuing about the amount and duration of transitional funding needed to develop new services within each county.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he will take to boost energy conservation in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have already taken several initiatives to encourage the efficient use of energy. In December 1991 I launched the "Energy Plan for Wales for the 1990s", which outlines our approach to energy conservation. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. At the same time I wrote to all local authorities stressing the importance of energy conservation.

Very recently I have supplemented this initiative by joining the corporate commitment campaign started by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. This campaign is aimed at top management of both the commercial and public sectors. I myself signed the commitment on behalf of the Welsh Office last December. Details of this campaign have also been placed in the Library of the House. My officials are at present very active in promulgating this message throughout Wales.

Community Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available extra funding for community care in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my announcement of 2 October that £35·9 million will be made available to local authorities in 1993-94 to meet the cost of their new responsibilities for community care. This includes the Department of Social Security transfer of £27·5 million, with a further £8·4 million for additional costs.

Schools and Colleges

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) infant schools, (b) primary schools, (c) secondary schools and (d) colleges of further education there were in Wales in each year since 1979; and how many places were offered by each category.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of infant, primary and secondary schools and colleges of further education in Wales in each year since 1979 is shown in the following table together with the total number of full and part-time pupils in schools and the number of enrolments in further education colleges. Information on the number of places offered by each category is not collected centrally.

[2] At November each year. All colleges offering further education courses each year (both further education and higher education colleges) are included in the table. The total number of further education enrolments is also shown irrespective of whether the course was run at a further education or higher education establishment.

Class Sizes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average class size of (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools, (c) sixth form colleges, (d) colleges of further education, (e) colleges of higher education and (f) infant schools in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The average class size in primary and secondary schools and further and higher education courses in Wales since 1979 is shown in the following table. Figures are not available for further and higher education courses before 1982-83 and for secondary schools before 1986-87. Information on the average class size of infant schools and sixth form colleges is not collected separately. Information for the colleges of the University of Wales is not available.

[1] Prior to 1986-87 information on the size of classes in secondary schools was collected on a different basis. These data, relating to the numbers of classes by size, are given in the Secondary Education section of 'Statistics of Education in Wales: Schools', copies of which are available in the Library.

[2] Average class sizes for Wales are calculated on a further education or higher education basis and the figures do include a small number of further education courses run at higher education establishments and higher education courses at further education establishments.

[3] Changes in methodology, introduced in 1988-89, may affect comparisons of indicators between 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Waiting List Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has given to purchasers and providers of health care concerning the use of marginal cost pricing for waiting list initiative expenditure; in what circumstances purchaser-provider arrangements for operations can be based on marginal cost pricing; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Negotiations between purchasers and providers, whether in respect of mainstream business, or specific initiatives such as that on waiting times, take place within the well-established ground rules for NHS contracting.

Office Furniture

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to order office furniture before 31 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Orders to the value of approximately £600 are waiting to be placed. Futher purchases may be made as required.

ENVIRONMENT

Halon Bank

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for establishing a United Kingdom halon bank.

Mr. Maclean: The Government do not plan to establish a Government-run United Kingdom halon bank. However, following discussions between Government halon users and the fire industry, I am pleased to announce the establishment of the project phase of the Halon Users' National Consortium (HUNC). HUNC is being set up by halon users and the fire industry with the aim of managing the United Kingdom installed bank of halons. It will act as a clearing house putting those who need to continue using halons in contact with those who do not. Unlike halon bank management proposals elsewhere in the world, HUNC will be a non-profit making organisation. It will be funded by members' subscriptions rather than from a levy on sales.

As its contribution to HUNC, my Department is funding publicity which is being issued to UK halon users this week. The set up costs for HUNC are being met by halon users and the fire industry. This is an excellent example of Government and industry co-operation.

Office of Water Services

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to increase the transparency of Ofwat;

(2) what plans he has to review the powers and accountability of Ofwat;

(3) what representations he has received concerning the powers and accountability of Ofwat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Director General of Water Services already operates an open regulatory regime, for example by consulting widely on issues such as future charging policy. The responses to these public consultations inform his decisions, which are published in press releases. Information notes are also available which explain Ofwat policy.

The powers of the Director General were reviewed in preparation for the Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992, which enhanced his powers in certain respects, for example in the resolution of disputes.

The Director General reports each year to the Secretary of State on the discharge of his duties. The Secretary of State lays a copy of the report before Parliament, and Select Committees may call the Director General to give evidence. Whilst my Department occasionally receives representations from consumers about the powers and accountability of the Director General, I have no current plans to review them further.

Pay-when-paid Policy

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide details of the pay-when-paid policy of the Property Services Agency and of its purpose and origins; and if he will make a statement on the application to this policy of the Government's requiring Departments to pay their private contractors as quickly as possible.

Mr. Redwood: New payment arrangements are being implemented by the PSA building management businesses, where they are acting as agents for the Ministry of Defence for payment purposes under MOD property management contracts, such that subcontractors are paid no later than seven days following receipt of payment from the client, MOD. There is an existing obligation on the MOD to pay promptly and this together with the new payment arrangements being adopted by the PSAS will ensure that subcontractors should be paid within 30 days from validation.

The development of the appropriate systems and procedural changes is underway so that by 1 April 1993 the five BM businesses are operating on this new basis. As these arrangements are introduced, I am demanding better performance from PSA in reducing delays in payments to contractors by getting invoices to MOD more promptly.

These arrangements create a contractual commitment on the managing contractor to make payment to subcontractors whose invoices have been accepted for payment by MOD and should be distinguished from other forms of "pay-when-paid" for capital works contracts whereby main contractors may withhold payments to subcontractors. This latter practice is inconsistent with the Government's prompt payment policy.

While the building management businesses are still in Government ownership, and they retain the obligations of the Government's prompt payment policy in their own right, a safety net will be in place so that PSA can ensure prompt payment to its contractors even where MOD has not paid PSA.

Landfill

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department intends to implement section 61 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering the appropriate time to implement section 61 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Lambeth Council

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of that part of Lambeth's current notional expenditure which consists of (a) interest charges and (b) debt write-off.

Mr. Robin Squire: The relevant notional amount specified for Lambeth in "The Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (England) 1993-94" reflects the authority's own estimate of the amounts of interest charges and debt write-off which it made when setting its 1992-93 budget and community charges.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much Lambeth council is currently permitted to borrow excluding capital projects.

Mr. Robin Squire: The limit on an authority's borrowing is its aggregate credit limit (ACL), or any lower limit the authority itself may have set. The ACL is determined by a formula. As the ACL can fluctuate from day to day, the ACL which is current at any time would have to be ascertained from the council.

Housing Association Grant

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent discretion is used in determining the amount of housing association grant available in each local authority's area; and what performance indicators are used in the exercise of the discretion.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation allocates 80 per cent. of the resources to a particular local authority area, over a three year period, in accordance with housing need, as measured by the housing needs indicator (HNI). The remaining 20 per cent. is distributed in the light of particular local circumstances, including the value for money of projects submitted by housing associations. Local priorities are discussed between housing authorities and the regional offices of the Housing Corporation before decisions are taken.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to make it unlawful for water companies or others to cause a disconnection of a consumer's water supply.

Mr. Maclean: None. It is right that bills should be paid, but equally that companies should deal sympathetically with customers who are having difficulty meeting their bills. The Director General of Water Services is responsible for protecting customers' interests. He has expressed his concern over the level of disconnections, and issued guidance to water companies last year on the subject of debt and disconnection to ensure they take a consistent and fair approach towards customers with unpaid charges. The Director General is in addition proposing to carry out research to find out more about the reasons people are disconnected. The Government welcome the actions he is taking.

Tenants Charter

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of the full council tenants charter have been requested from his Department.

Mr. Baldry: Copies of the full tenants charter were sent to all local housing authorities, housing organisations, citizens advice bureaux and law centres. In addition, over 200,000 copies of the English and ethnic language versions of the full council tenants charter have been directly requested from my Department, mainly by tenants.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of the full tenants charter were printed in each language; and at what cost.

Mr. Baldry: One million copies of the English language version of the full tenants charter have been printed at a cost of £123,176. Five thousand copies of each of the five ethnic language versions (Hindi, Greek, Vietnamese, Bengali and Urdu) have been printed at a cost of £41,422.

Drinking Water

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the legislation or regulations requiring that information regarding the quality of drinking water is made available to the public by the water companies.

Mr. Maclean: Regulation 30 of The Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989, SI No. 1147, requires that a water undertaker shall make available for inspection by the public at all reasonable hours and free of charge, at such of its offices as are normally open to the public, and record maintained by it in accordance with regulation 29. This includes for each water supply zone, its name, the supplying water treatment works, its population, particulars of any relaxation granted or undertakings given in respect of the water supply in the zone and particulars of the result of analyses of samples taken in accordance with other parts of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations.

In addition, regulation 31 requires water undertakers to prepare for publication an annual report in accordance with the terms of that regulation. A copy must be sent to the local authority for each area in which it supplies water.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the methods used to monitor direct labour organisations and the publication of comparability studies showing performance indicators of efficiency, effectiveness, employment and value for money in respect of each local authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities carrying out work within an activity defined under the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 or the Local Government Act 1988 are required to keep accounts and to meet a financial objective set by my right hon. and learned Friend. They are also required to submit annual reports on these matters to my right hon. and learned Friend who considers in each case whether there are grounds for exercising his sanction powers. The introduction of local government performance indicators is a key feature in this Government's determination to raise the standard of public services. I believe that the methods adopted by the Audit Commission will enable the citizen to judge the performance of their local council in comparison with those of a similar background.

Tenants

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the responses received by his Department to the consultation paper "Compensation for Tenants' Improvements".

Sir George Young: Some 61 responses to the consultation paper have been received to date. A list of the respondents has been placed in the Library of the House. The responses will be held for six months in the Department's central library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the ratio of expenditure on administration to total expenditure for (a) county councils and (b) shire district councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The budgeted ratio of expenditure on general administration (not allocated to other services) to total expenditure on services (both measured net of sales, fees and charges) in 1992-93 was 0·3 per cent. in county councils and 3 per cent. in shire district councils.

Housing

116. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish responses to the consultation paper draft explanatory note on planning and affordable housing.

Sir George Young: We will place copies in the Library of the House of Commons once we have finished considering them and have issued a final version of the guidance.

Council Leaseholders

117. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to assist council leaseholders.

Sir George Young: The Government legislated in 1986 to meet concerns over high service charges on flats sold under the right to buy. Purchasers now have binding estimates of the maximum charges for repairs and improvements during the first five years of the lease, and the right to a loan for particularly high charges.

Leaseholders have nevertheless reported difficulties over service charges and over resale. The Department is looking into these with landlords and the Council of Mortgage Lenders.

Housing, Tower Hamlets

120. Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public sector dwellings were started and completed by the Tower Hamlets local authority and by housing associations in Tower Hamlets in each year since 1986.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of housebuilding starts and completions by sector in Tower Hamlets for each year from 1986 to 1991 and for the first half of 1992 are shown in the October 1992 edition of "Local Housing Statistics" (issue No. 103), tables 1(b) to 1(h). A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Substandard Accommodation

121. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of (a) Asian and (b) white households live in substandard accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available.

Inner City Projects, Coventry

124. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total amount of grants for inner city projects in Coventry given in each of the last five years.

Mr. Robin Squire: This Department has provided the following inner cities grants to Coventry in the last five years:

	1992-93	1991-92	1990-91	1989-90	1988-89
Urban Programme	4·645	4·772	4·798	4·575	4·79

	6·958	6·797	5·659	6·078	7·595
Estate Action (Total for period—£13 million)

125. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has received for schemes for inner city projects in Coventry which he does not propose to fund.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have received a number of proposals from Coventry along with other local authorities of support for inner city projects which we have not been able to assist. Clearly we do not have unlimited funds. However it is open to local authorities to support such projects through use of their capital receipts and any private sector or other contributions.

Inner City Policies

126. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the reviews that have been undertaken by his Department on the operation of the Government's inner city policies.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department has carried out a number of evaluations of its various programmes for urban areas including, most recently, the achievements of three of the inner cities task forces; relevant reports are in the Library. Further details of my Department's urban policies and programmes are in the 1993 DOE annual report published 10 February.

Local Government Commission

128. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out the full proposed timetable for the second tranche of the work of the Local Government Commission;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that all local authorities are given adequate advance warning of the start time of the local government review in their area;

(3) if he will make it his policy not to require the Local Government Commission to begin any review in the period immediately before or immediately after the 1993 local elections.

Mr. Robin Squire: In reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field), my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Local Government and Inner Cities announced on 4 February the timetable for the Local Government Commission's second tranche reviews, and placed a copy in the House Library.

All local authorities in the areas in the second tranche were sent a copy of the announcement, together with the timetable. This gives them a minimum of three months to prepare their initial submissions to the commission.

The Secretary of State intends to direct the commission to begin the first review in the second tranche on 10 May 1993, immediately after the county council elections. There is no need to delay the beginning of the reviews any further.

Homelessness

129. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentages of (a) ethnic minorities and (b) white people are homeless in London.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 in their quarterly P1(E) return.

In the quarter ending September 1992 only 17 out of 33 London boroughs provided the information classified by ethnic origin. On average in those boroughs 47 per cent. of households accepted as homeless were from ethnic minorities and 53 per cent. were white.

Housing Associations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the Hambros report into the actuarial margin of risk of private sector borrowing by housing associations.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) on Monday 18 January at column 113.

135. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the change in the share of housing association programmes dedicated to rehabilitation of existing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Department has commissioned research into the amount of rehabilitation work undertaken by housing associations. The first part of the research, undertaken by PIEDA plc in association with Rodney Dykes Housing Services Ltd, was published at the end of January. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

The results show that there are a number of factors which have resulted in fewer dwellings being rehabilitated by housing associations than in the past. In addition to the changes brought about by the new financial regime, introduced by the Housing Act 1988, they include: the availability of cheaper land relative to the acquisition costs of properties in need of repair, which encourages new build; increasing opportunities for off-the-shelf purchases of new dwellings from private builders; and the drying up of suitable properties available for rehabilitation in some areas.

The Department has recently let a contract for the second part of the research, which will examine the effects of the decline. The research will again be undertaken by PIEDA, which is due to report in December this year. In the meantime, I have asked the Housing Corporation to aim to maintain rehabat at least at its current level.

Local Authority Housing

140. Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority dwellings were reported as vacant in the London borough of Tower Hamlets in 1992; what percentage of the local authority housing stock this figure respresents; and what is the comparable percentage in other London boroughs.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities report the numbers of their own dwellings that are vacant in their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns. At 1 April 1992 Tower Hamlets reported 1,703 of their dwellings as empty, 4·2 per cent. of their dwelling stock. The comparable percentage for the other London boroughs is 2·3 per cent.

House Completions, Leicester

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses were completed in Leicester in 1979, 1989 and 1992 respectively.

Mr. Baldry: The total number of housebuilding completions in the city of Leicester local authority area in 1979 was 1,247, in 1989, 227 and for 1992, provisionally, 534.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the next uniform business rate revaluation is due to take place.

Mr. Robin Squire: New rating lists will be compiled on 1 April 1995 based on 1 April 1993 values.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the sum paid by British Coal in uniform business rates for 1992 (a) in total and (b) in respect of the 31 pits due for closure.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the rates paid by British Coal is not held centrally by the Government.

English Nature

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given to English Nature concerning its obligation to disseminate to the public data and information on the state of the environment; and what steps are being taken by English Nature to advertise its new responsibilities relating to the provision of environmental information.

Mr. Maclean: English Nature already disseminates information on nature conservation as one of its key functions. My Department has provided guidance on the new Environmental Information Regulations which took effect in December and English Nature will be taking steps to inform its customers and partners of how it intends to meet its obligations under the regulations.

Environmental Data

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instruct the Joint Nature Conservation Committee to institute a system to ensure that enviornmental data or information disseminated by English Nature, Scottish Natural Heritage or the Countryside Council for Wales are made available in a mutually consistent form.

Mr. Maclean: No. This is a matter for the committee to consider in consultation with the three councils.

Parliament Square (Air Quality)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 10 January, Official Report, columns 654-55, what is the nearest point to Parliament square, Westminster, for which he has records of air quality; and if he will undertake a sample survey of air quality in Parliament square.

Mr. Maclean: The site nearest to Parliament square at which air quality is monitored is at Bridge place, Victoria. The Department has no plans to undertake air quality monitoring in Parliament square.

Darwin Initiative

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Advisory Committee on the Darwin Initiative and indicate its membership.

Mr. Howard: The Prime Minister signed the convention on biological diversity in Rio de Janiero at the UN conference on environment and development. In order to support the aims of the convention he launched at that time the Darwin initiative for the survival of species. The initiative aims to deploy British scientific, managerial and commercial strengths in biodiversity to assist with the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity and natural habitats.

In December a consultation paper was issued to a wide variety of individuals, organisations and individuals seeking views on the scope of the initiative and ideas for projects which might meet the initiative's objectives. I announced at that time that I intended to establish an advisory committee on the Darwin initiative. This committee will have regard to the work already in progress on biodiversity and the available resources, and will make recommendations on the areas on which the Darwin initiative should initially be targeted, the relative priority to be given to different programmes, and the financial support to be made available to them. Sir Crispin Tickell has agreed to be chairman of that committee, and I am pleased to announce that the other members of the committee are: Ms. Janet Barber, Dr. Brian Bayne FIBiol, Dr. Eileen Buttle FIBiol, Mr. Robin Herbert DL JP, David Horrobin, professor Robert May FRS and Sir David Smith FRS FRSE. The committee held its first meeting on 15 February.

Olympic Bid

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the Manchester 2000 Olympic bid; and if he will make a statement on Government support.

Mr. Howard: The details of the formal bid submitted by the Manchester Olympic Bid Committee to the International Olympic Committee will be made public today. I am arranging for a copy of the candidature file and the executive summary to be placed in the Library of the House.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities previously announced on Tuesday 26 January—Official Report column 600—that the Government are providing up to £75 million to support the bid in advance of the IOC's decision on the nomination. In addition, the candidature file sets out the undertakings made by the Government if Manchester is successful. In particular, the Government will ensure that all the necessary facilities will be built, partly by private finance and partly by substantial public funding. We also intend to legislate at the earliest opportunity following the IOC's nomination of Manchester to ensure that the Organising Committee for the Games has the necessary powers to plan and implement this event. The Government are backing wholeheartedly Manchester's bid for the 2000 Olympic Games.

London Boroughs (Debt)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he proposes to make available to London boroughs and the Common Council during 1993-94 in respect of extra costs due to his decisions on housing revenue account subsidy in respect of debt inherited from the former Greater London Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: It is my right hon. Friend's firm intention to issue capitalisation directions and supplementary credit approvals (SCAs) to authorities facing during 1993-94 extra costs due to his decision that housing revenue account subsidy is not payable under the statute in respect of certain debts inherited from the former Greater London council. The court yesterday upheld this decision.

Authorities which face such extra costs will be able to apply for capitalisation directions and SCAs during a period which my right hon. Friend intends to specify and which will not be shorter than six months from yesterday when the court gave its judgment.

In deciding the amount of a direction and SCA to issue to an authority, my right hon. Friend intends to have regard inter alia to the resources available to him under the Government's public expenditure plans, the authority's 1993-94 budget—in particular the scope for the authority to accommodate the extra costs within that budget, and to the financial reserves and useable capital receipts available to the authority. To the extent that costs are covered by directions and SCAs their impact on the council tax is spread over a number of years.

I am arranging for London boroughs and the Common Council to be sent today the details of the scheme for issuing these directions and SCAs which my right hon. Friend intends to adopt. Authorities will need to take account of these intentions when setting their 1993-94 budgets.

River Pollution

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the closure of pits in the Durham coalfield on the pollution of the River Wear and other local waterways;

(2) what response he has made to the report on the probable environmental impact of the closure of Vane Tempest and Easington collieries by Dr. Paul Younger of Newcastle university; and what steps he is taking to avoid pollution of the River Wear.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 15 February 1993]: None. It is for British Coal and the National Rivers Authority, in the first place, to assess the environmental effects of pit closures and any relevant reports on the subject, and to consider what action may need to be taken to avoid pollution. My officials and the staff of the NRA have been in frequent contact about pollution from closed mines, and arrangements have been made between British Coal and the NRA for effective liaison over any proposed pit closures.

Unified Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will hold talks with the National Federation of Housing Associations, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of district councils to discuss the establishment of unified housing waiting lists between local authorities and housing associations.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 February 1993]: My Department held a seminar which discussed the subject last year; attendance included representatives of the organisations mentioned. We are considering holding a further seminar to review developments.

Audit Commission (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has received from the Audit Commission that arising out of the discharge of its own duties it has discovered substantial fraud, corruption or other crimes, or substantial ultra vires expenditure, in Lambeth.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 16 February 1993]: Neither the Audit Commission nor the auditor report to my right hon. and learned Friend: they perform their duties independently. I understand, however, that Lambeth's auditor is preparing a report which will deal with allegations of fraud, corruption and related matters.

Seven Estuary (Pollution)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total annual discharge into the Severn estuary from English counties of (a) ammonia, (b) cadmium, (c) lead, (d) copper, (e) chromium, )f) cyanide, (g) nickel, (h) mercury and (i) zince in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The information requested is not held centrally. Details of maximum authorised loads contained in relevant discharge consents, and related water quality monitoring results for the Severn estuary, are available on public registers in the National Rivers Authority regions concerned.

Minewater Pumping

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussion he has had with the National Rivers Authority about the consequences of stopping minewater pumping in the Tyneside area.

Mr. MacLean*[holding answer 19 January 1993]:* My right hon. Friend and I have not discussed this specific matter with the National Rivers Authority. It is for British Coal and the NRA, in the first place, to assess any environmental consquences of stopping minewater pumping.

Drivers (Criminal Convictions)

109. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has conducted into the extent to which drivers seeking licences to drive hackney carriages and private hire carriages have failed to disclose information relating to (a) rape offences and (b) other criminal convictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

No such research has been undertaken. Outside London, district councils issue licences to drive hackney carriages and private hire vehicles and since 1 April 1992 they have been able to request a police check of the possible criminal record of applicants for licences. Only each individual council, after obtaining criminal record details, would be able to gauge the extent to which licence holders had failed to disclose previous convictions. I do not believe there is any need to hold such information centrally.

119. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to ensure that licences to drive hackney carriages and private hire vehicles are not issued to men with criminal records which include rape.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Section 47 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 gives local authorities a power to check with the police if applicants for hackney carriage and PHV drivers' licences have any criminal convictions. A copy of the guidance issued to police and local authorities last year on how the vetting arrangements should operate was placed in the House of Commons Library.

District councils must decide, on the basis of all the information at their disposal, whether an applicant is a fit and proper person to hold such a licence. They should not take into account any convictions which are "spent" by virtue of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 18 February 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities have been appointed as justices of the peace in Nottinghamshire since 1989.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since 1989, 151 persons have been appointed as justices of the peace in Nottinghamshire. Of that number there were 74 females and eight members of ethnic minorities—four males and four females.

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to continue to decline to hold meetings at ministerial level with the leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway) on 10 February, at column 680.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many chlorofluorocarbon and hydrochlorofluorocarbon installations are contained within his Department's buildings.

Mr. Goodlad: Four hundred and thirty nine.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much funding has been allocated or spent specifically to deal with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Goodlad: The Department has allocated £75,000 in the 1993-94 financial year for absorption chiller plant to reduce its use of CFCs/HCFCs, and £157,000 on high-frequency lighting to reduce carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in the Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the departmental green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. Goodlad: The green Ministers for the Department continue to promote protection of the ozone layer through active FCO involvement in international environmental policy, the planned reduction of energy consumption in the Department and the reduction of use of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. Goodlad: The Department is advised that the only ozone-depleting chemicals considered essential are those in inhalants supplied to posts overseas for medicinal purposes.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Mr. Goodlad: The Department is advised that it is only the production and supply of new ozone-depleting substances which must conform to EC Regulations. The Department will, however, reduce its use of ozone-depleting substances as soon as practicable.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within Departmental buildings.

Mr. Goodlad: None. Information is currently being compiled to enable targets to be set.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many chlorofluorocarbon domestic fridges are contained within his Department's buildings.

Mr. Goodlad: Three hundred and sixty-seven.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within his Department's buildings on the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere.

Mr. Goodlad: Equipment containing ozone-depleting substances is returned to the manufacturers for recycling.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give an undertaking to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain chlorofluorocarbons or hydrochlorofluorocarbons for his Department.

Mr. Goodlad: The Department does not purchase fridges containing CFCs or HCFCs where acceptable alternatives offering value for money are available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department.

Mr. Goodlad: In 1992, the Department appointed a firm of consultants to carry out a programme of environmental audits of its home estate. A primary purpose of the audits was to seek advice on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use in the Department. The consultants are due to report shortly.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commowealth Affairs how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within Departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. Goodlad: One hundred and forty-five. They will be replaced this year and returned to the manufacturers for recycling.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a United Kingdom Government Minister last visited the Indian-controlled area of Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am not aware that any official visits have been made by United Kingdom Government Ministers to Kashmir in recent years.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he has had with the Pakistan Government as to possible aid from Her Majesty's Government to help resettle Kashmiri people who have fled from the Indian-controlled area of Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have had no discussion with the Pakistan Government about helping to resettle Kashmiris.

Birmingham Summit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, official Report, column 393, what subheads of what votes will be used to meet the cost of the Birmingham summit; and how these costs were apportioned.

Mr. Garel-Jones The costs of the Birmingham European summit were met as follows:

FCO vote 1, subhead A 1 (1)	2.3
Home Office vote 1, subhead D1. Specific grant at 51 per cent. of the additional policing costs	0.8

Eastern Europe

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to open new posts in the independent states of the former Soviet Union and in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I am pleased to announce that we shall be opening three new embassies in the former Soviet Union and eastern Europe. They will be in Baku, the capital of Azerbaijan; Tashkent, the capital of Uzbekistan; and Bratislava, the capital of Slovakia. All of these countries are going through an important and difficult process of political and economic change. We want to be in the best position to help and encourage the development of democratic societies pursuing liberal economic policies and to promote trade and investment. In the case of both Baku and Tashkent, we are responding to direct requests from British industry to open embassies in each place.

This decision has been made possible by savings in support areas at home and overseas.

DEFENCE

Radiation Workers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to introduce a no fault compensation scheme for radiation workers employed by or contracted to his Department similar to the scheme adopted by British Nuclear Fuels and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Aitken: Consideration is being given to the introduction of radiation compensation arrangements similar in effect to those of the civil nuclear industry. The possibility of my Department's membership of, or association with, the BNFL/AEA scheme is under discussion with the industry and the trade unions.

Mr. Rudi Molinari

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on legal fees for participation in the court case involving the claim for compensation by Mr. Rudi Molinari, a former employee at the royal dockyard at Chatham, against his Department for damage claimed to have been received from radiation exposure at the shipyard.

Mr. Aitken: This case is the subject of continuing legal proceedings and the costs are not yet known.

Helicopter Carrier Ship

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the programme for the procurement of the helicopter carrier ship.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 9 February, Official Report, column 574.

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number
1980	13
1981	7
1982	13
1983	15
1984	6
1985	10
1986	29
1987	11
1988	5
1989	10
1990	7
1991	9
1992	7

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Aitken: We estimate that, since 1979, competition for defence support services has resulted in a reduction of 18,000 posts in my Department and in the agencies for which we are responsible.

Armed Forces (Sexual Behaviour)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for the regulation of inappropriate sexual behaviour between heterosexual members of the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Service personnel are made aware of the standards of behaviour required and that inappropriate sexual behaviour of any kind can lead to administrative or disciplinary action. Inappropriate sexual conduct of a heterosexual nature by members of the armed forces is dealt with under existing service regulations.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will bring forward proposals governing the conduct of British troops serving with homosexual armed forces personnel in combined NATO or UN peace-keeping forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British Armed Forces personnel are well aware of the standards of behaviour expected of them and the consequences of any misconduct, heterosexual, homosexual or otherwise. We have no plans, therefore, to introduce regulations specific to those serving with NATO or UN peace-keeping forces alongside homosexual personnel of other armed forces.

MFV Pescado

99. Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will deploy Royal Navy facilities to raise the MFV Pescado.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The raising of the MFV Pescado is a matter for the civil authorities. Any request for assistance would, however, be given careful consideration.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Calming

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when consultation on regulations under the Traffic Calming Act 1992 is to start.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Commencing today, the Department of Transport and the Welsh Office are consulting widely on draft regulations with the local authority associations and other interested parties. We aim to draw the consultation to a close before Easter.

MV Goldeneye

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the reasons for awarding MV Goldeneye a load line exemption certificate; what is the registration of MV Goldeneye; and if he will carry out a port state control inspection of MV Goldeneye.

Mr. Norris: The owners of the unregistered salvage vessel Goldeneye applied for a load line exemption certificate which was issued after survey by a Department surveyor.

The ship is subject to inspection at any time and arrangements will be made accordingly within the inspection programme.

Unseaworthy Vessels

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of foreign ships inspected in British ports in each of the last five years under the provisions of the 1982 memorandum of understanding to secure compliance of ships with international standards; how many ships were found to have deficiencies; under which flag those ships with deficiencies were sailing and what was the amount of deficiencies per individual country; how many ships were detained pending the correction of deficiencies; and what financial penalties were imposed.

Mr. Norris: The numbers of foreign flag ships inspected under the provisions of the memorandum of understanding on port state control 1982 and the number found to have at least one deficiency were as follows:

Year	Number	Number with deficiencies
1988	1839	915
1989	1,692	1,003
1990	2,118	1,272
1991	2,500	1,647
1992	[1]2,105	[1]1,439

Deficiencies were found on ships flying the following flags during 1991 and 1992:

Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Estonia, Ethiopia, Faeroe Islands, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Korea, Latvia, Lebanon, Liberia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Morocco, Myanmar, Netherlands, Netherland Antilles, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Russia, Saudia Arabia, Singapore, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, St. Vincent and Grenadines, Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, Taiwan, Togo, Turkey, Tunisia, Tuvalu, USA, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Vietnam, Yugoslavia.

The average numbers of deficiencies per ship inspection for the port state control region as a whole were:

Year	Number
1988	1·35
1989	1·49
1990	1·62
1991	1·80
1992	[1]—

[1] Not yet available.

Individual figures for the United Kingdom are not readily available; nor are figures for individual flags.

The numbers of foreign ships detained were:

Year	Number
1988	37
1989	44
1990	79
1991	116
1992	124

Financial penalties cannot readily be measured, but usually comprise three main elements: the often considerable loss of revenue arising from delays in sailing, the cost of rectifying deficiencies found and the cost of any further inspection to ensure that these deficiencies have been satisfactorily rectified.

Railway Privatisation

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the date by which comments were sought on his Department's consultative document "Railway Privatisation: A Voice for the Passengers"; and when copies of this document were made available in the Vote Office;

(2) how many copies of his Department's consultative document "Railway Privatisation: A Voice for the Passenger" were printed; and how and when these documents were made available to British Rail passengers.

Mr. Freeman: The document was published on 16 December 1992 and 2,000 copies were printed. It was placed in the Vote Office the same day and copies were sent to bodies likely to have an interest in the future of the consultative committees. The availability of the document was publicised in a press notice and copies have been provided free of charge on request. The requested reply date for comments was 22 January 1993.

Zebra Crossings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many pedestrians have been hit by a motor vehicle while crossing a zebra crossing in England and Wales during the year 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Data are not yet available for 1992. There were 1,673 pedestrians injured by motor vehicles on zebra crossings in 1991 in England and Wales.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what immediate steps he proposes to take to improve safety regulations on oil tankers within British waters.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 12 February 1993]: Regulations governing tankers are under constant review within the International Maritime Organisation. The Department is at the forefront of these discussions and developments.

In addition, an initiative has been taken by national and international organisations concerned with tanker operations to develop a voluntary code with regard to tanker routeing around the United Kingdom coast. They have also given an undertaking to re-emphasise to masters the need to pay greater attention to passage planning and to provide early advice to coastal states when tankers are experiencing problems which affect their navigation.

Radio Transponders

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions since 1 January 1988 Ministers and officials of his Department have taken part in meetings of the International Maritime Organisation or its committees to discuss the subject of fitting radio transponders on vessels.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 16 February 1993]: Department officials have taken part in four meetings of the sub-committee on safety of navigation and one meeting of the sub-committee on radiocommunications at the International Maritime Organisation since 1 January 1988 with regard to developing radio transponders for use on vessels.

Vessel Inspections

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many port state inspections of vessels have been undertaken by officials of his Department at (a) Sullom Voe and (b) Flotta in each year since 1990 and in January 1993; and what percentage of vessels visiting these respective ports the numbers constitute.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The directors of marine at Sullom Voe and Flotta carry out their own vetting procedure of visiting ships and alert the Department if they are concerned by the condition of a visiting ship.

In addition the number of port state control inspections undertaken at Sullom Voe and Flotta for the years in question is given in the table.

Number of Inspections

Year	Sullom Voe	Flotta
1990	15	Nil
1991	9	3
January 1993	Nil	Nil

These inspections constituted the following percentages of individual foreign ships which visited these ports.

Year	Sullom Voe	Flotta
1990	10	Nil
1991	5	4
January 1993	Nil	Nil

HOME DEPARTMENT

Overseas Political Organisations

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances he would take steps to prevent political organisations of other countries from maintaining offices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: People in this country are free to engage in what political activities they like, including working for foreign political organisations, provided of course that their activities remain within the law.

Devon and Cornwall Police

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 439, how many recruits began service with the Devon and Cornwall constabulary on 7 December 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Sixteen recruits began service with the Devon and Cornwall constabulary on 7 December 1992.

Royal Commission on Criminal Justice

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of the Royal Commission on criminal justice is due to be completed; and when he expects to publish it.

Mr. Jack: The Royal Commission on criminal justice hopes to complete its report by the end of June. The report will be published as soon thereafter as printing schedules allow.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the Council for Europe convention on data protection provides a framework for harmonisation of European Community data protection laws.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Council of Europe convention for the protection of individuals with regard to automatic processing of personal data prescribes the basic principles which have to be observed in handling personal data within states party to the convention. Accession to the convention by all European Community member states, and the enactment of the necessary domestic legislation to give effect to the convention's requirements, would thus provide for a consistent data protection regime within the Community.

Children's Rights

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will introduce legislation to give United Kingdom courts jurisdiction to try British nationals and residents for sexual offences against children abroad; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures the British Government are taking to comply with article 34 of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Mr. Jack: The Government wholly support the principles set out in the United Nations convention on the rights of the child, which we ratified in 1991. Our law against the sexual abuse and exploitation of children is rightly severe.

We have no plans, however, to extend the largely territorial jurisdiction of our courts to deal with offences committed abroad against children; nor is there any requirement for us to do so in order to fulfil our obligations under article 34 of the convention. Where such offences have been committed abroad it is for the country concerned to enforce its own law. We are always ready, however, to assist through extradition and by giving legal assistance under the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990.

Sex Tourism

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the British Government have taken to discourage the promotion of sex tourism through holiday brochures, magazines and other forms of mass communications in this country.

Mr. Jack: While the Government have no power to ban or censor publications, anyone publishing brochures promoting sex tourism could risk prosecution under the Obscene Publications Act 1959, or for an offence of conspiracy to corrupt public morals at common law. It would, however, be for the courts to decide whether an offence had been committed in any individual case.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of notifiableoffences were cleared up in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) July 1991 to June 1992, in each offence category and for each police force region.

Mr. Jack: The requested information for 1990 is published in table 2.22 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1990," a copy of which is available in the Library. Information for 1991 is published in the table. Information for the 12 months to June 1992 is not available.

[2] Offences cleared up in current year may have been initially recorded in an earlier year.

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the police manpower levels, crime statistics and clear-up rates of police forces in (a) England and Wales and (b) other EC countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The police forces of England and Wales provide monthly statistical returns of strength for police officers and civilian support staff. Information on notifiable offences recorded by the police and clear-up rates is collected on a regular basis and the statistics are published half-yearly in a Home Office statistical bulletin and annually in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics: England and Wales".

Comparable statistical data on police service complementing or crime rates for member states of the EC are not available.

Obscenity

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 February to the hon. Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink) Official Report, column 350, if he will indicate the precise terms in which he is currently consulting about the subject of obscenity; if he will make it his policy to include an invitation to comment on the provisions of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 as distinct from the means of its enforcement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I have asked my officials to consider, in consultation with other parties, whether improvements might be made in the enforcement of the Obscene Publications Acts 1959 and 1964, and other legislation relating to obscenity. I have not asked them to invite wider comment on the provisions of the Obscene Publications Act 1959, although as I indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point, I am receiving representations relating to the Act, which I keep under review.

Ecstasy

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have died from the use of the drug Ecstasy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: This information is not collected centrally.

Ram Raiding

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to alert businesses to the threat of ram raiding.

Mr. Jack: In areas where ram raiding is a problem, the local police are able to alert businesses to the risks and, drawing on their own experience and the expertise of the Home Office crime prevention centre at Stafford, they are always ready to give specialist advice on what measures the owners can take to protect their premises against this type of offence.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees from Bosnia have arrived in each EC country; and how many are expected in the next six months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the period January 1992 to January 1993 inclusive around 5,900 nationals of the former Yugoslavia, excluding dependants, have applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. The large majority of these applications are still under consideration and the applicants are being allowed to stay in the meantime. More detailed data on the origin of the applicants are not available.

In addition, as I announced to the House on 30 November 1992, we are willing to accept 1,000 ex-detainees from Bosnia and other parts of the former Yugoslavia, together with their dependants, totalling perhaps 4,000 in all. The first two groups have already arrived.

The available information on applicants to other EC member states is given in the table.

It is not feasible to make a forecast of future applications, in view of the uncertainties.

Asylum applications[1] [2] by nationals of the former Yugoslavia to certain other EC member states from around mid 1991 to the latter part of 1992

	Applications
Belgium	2,000
Denmark	6,400
France	2,400
Germany	171,000
Greece	10
Irish Republic	—
Italy	100

Deaths in Custody

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take on the suggestion in the report of the Ashworth special hospital inquiry 1992, chaired by Sir Louis Blom Cooper, that the Government should make a modest contribution annually to the organisation Inquest to allow it to represent those who die in legal custody.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 15 February 1993]: The Government have no plans to contribute to the funding of the organisation Inquest.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research and Development

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the expenditure on (a) the second framework research and development programme 1987 to 1991 and (b) the third framework research and development programme from 1990 to1994 in total and broken down by programme area; what is the share of spend in each programme by the United Kingdom and Germany in total and for each programme area; and if he will express the figures in pound sterling and in ecus.

Mr. Waldegrave: The second EC framework programme, adopted on 28 September 1987, amounted to 5.396 billion ecu—£4.088 billion at current exchange rates—and was distributed between the main programme areas as set out in table A.

The third EC framework programme, adopted on 23 April 1990, amounted to 5.7 billion ecu—£4.318 billion—and the Council reached a common orientation for a supplement of 900 million ecu—£682 million—on 31 December 1992. The funds will be allocated between the main areas of research as set out in table B.

EC research programmes under the overlapping frameworks are managed mainly by directorates general XII and XIII of the European Commission. Information on the share of funds awarded to research organisations in member states, in the form of shared cost contracts, has been derived from Commission statistics for the period 1987-1991. For this purpose the Commission has grouped the specific research programmes of the second framework programme in the same format as the third framework programme, and its analysis includes all contracts awarded after 1986, including some made under the first framework programme of 1984-87.

The difference between total contract expenditure of 3,038·78 million ecu in table C and the overall amount agreed for the second framework programme of 5,396 million ecu in table A includes expenditure on other mechanisms for developing Community research, such as concerted actions, conferences, workshops, publications, direct research activities at the joint research centre, fusion research, and sums yet to be committed.

The funds under the first and second framework programmes awarded to United Kingdom and German research organisations between 1987-1991 are summarised by programme, according to Commission statistics, in table C. A full statistical table showing funds awarded to all member states will be placed in the Library.

Because of delays in implementation, only preliminary statistics are available for the third framework programme. These are set out in table D.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide figures for the reduction in number of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Public Record Office

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has recently received about the release of specific retained documents by the Public Record Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Jackson: In response to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy's invitation to historians in June 1992 to inform him of blocks of closed records that should now be considered for release, he has received more than 50 representations relating to the release of such records.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Apple Juice

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will name the brands of apple juice containing high levels of patulin which have been on sale in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: It is not the Department's general policy to publish details of the brands of products examined in the course of food surveillance unless there is a particular need to do so. In this case I believe it would not be helpful to publish the brands involved. The evidence we have is that, as with any naturally occurring toxicant, there is likely to be a good deal of variation in contamination levels between batches of apple juice regardless of the producer. Furthermore, the manufacturers involved have now taken steps to avoid a recurrence of the problem.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the danger of (a) cancer and (b) birth defects resulting from consumption of apple juice containing high levels of patulin.

Mr. Soames: There is no evidence linking the consumption of apple juice containing patulin with any cases of cancer or birth defects. However, the Department of Health has advised me that patulin has been shown to be a mutagen in both in vitro and in vivo studies in animals and should be regarded as a potential carcinogen. The Department's committee on toxicity has therefore advised that patulin levels in food should be reduced to the lowest level that is technologically achievable.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Employees' Remuneration)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require each local authority to publish annually the level of salary and the total remuneration package, including pension arrangements, payable to the authority's chief executive and directors.

Mr. Redwood: There is a strong case for local authorities to publish details of the pay of their senior staff in broadly the same way as companies are required to publish details of the pay of their senior employees. However, I am also keen to keep new obligations on local authorities under control.

My Department will consider what information it would be appropriate for local authorities to publish and the best way for the local authorities to be encouraged to make that information public. Of course, no new stipulations would be introduced without consultation with the local authority associations.

Environmental Technology Innovation Scheme

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the initial three-year budget of his Department's environmental technology innovation scheme launched in October 1990; and how much has been spent to date.

Mr. Maclean: The initial budget for the environmental technology innovation scheme—ETIS—was £12 million divided equally between my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry. Of the £4·6 million so far committed by the DOE on approved projects, £1·25 million has been spent to date. These two figures include grants to projects initially submitted under DOE's predecessor scheme which was subsumed into ETIS in October 1990.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to finalise the environmental technology innovation scheme budget for the next financial year.

Mr. Maclean: Provision for my Department's expenditure on grants under the scheme will be included in the main supply estimates which will be published next month.

Noise Pollution

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates his Department has made of the level of noise pollution generated by seismic survey activity; and what studies his Department has made of the effect of noise pollution on marine life in United Kingdom coastal water.

Mr. Maclean: Seismic survey activity is usually undertaken to support oil and gas exploration and is therefore a matter for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. My Department has recently established a working group on acoustic disturbance to small cetaceans, under the chairmanship of the Natural Environment Research Council's sea mammals research unit.

Waste Shipments

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress was made during the United Kingdom presidency of the EC in regulating transfrontier shipments of waste.

Mr. Maclean: The Environment Council reached agreement on the waste shipments regulation and on a decision on the conclusion, by the Community and its member states, of the United Nations Environment Programme's Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 27 October 1992, Official Report, column 534 and the answer my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) on 17 December, Official Report, column 506.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a detailed breakdown of the increase from 1991-92 to 1992-93 for the energy efficiency office as listed at figures 8 and 20 of his Department's annual report 1993, Cm. 2207; and if he will make a statement on the effects upon the office of transfer to his Department.

Mr. Maclean: A breakdown of expenditure by the Energy Efficiency Office by programme area is given in figure 20 of the Department's annual report. This lists annual expenditure and future plans for the period 1987-88 to 1995-96.

The Government remain fully committed to the work of the EEO, which was transferred to the Department of the Environment in view of the environmental importance of energy efficiency. The EEO continues to offer and develop a wide range of programmes designed to encourage cost-effective improvements in energy efficiency in industry, commerce and the public sector and in the home.

Planning, South-East

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the draft regional planning guidance for the south-east will be published.

Mr. Baldry: My Department expects to publish new draft regional planning guidance for the south-east shortly.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to publish draft planning guidance for regions of the United Kingdom other than the south-east; and what account these will take of the plans for the south-east.

Mr. Baldry: Regional planning guidance was published for East Anglia in July 1991. Draft regional planning guidance for the northern region was issued for consultation on 10 February 1993. Regional planning guidance will be issued for all other English regions by the end of 1993 or as early as possible thereafter. All regional planning guidance will take account of planning policies in other regions. Planning policies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the respective Secretaries of State.

Business Rate

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of the extent of the practice whereby buildings and property are stripped to avoid liability under the uniform business rate.

Mr. Robin Squire: We know of some cases where preliminary refurbishment or redevelopment work may have been brought forward to avoid rates. However, we are not aware of any empty properties that have been made unusable simply in order to avoid them.

West End Scheme, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current position regarding the application by 3Ds Ltd. for city grant for the west end scheme in Bradford.

Mr. Robin Squire: An application has been made in respect of a first phase of the project. The appraisal was completed in November, but no decision has been taken because the applicants have yet to confirm whether they wish to proceed with the project.

Home Improvement Agencies

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total allocation, for each region, to home improvement agencies in England in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Sir George Young: The total regional allocations in respect of home improvement agencies—HIAs—in 1991-92 and 1992-93 are set out in the table. In addition, we have allocated £290,000 in 1991-92 and £361,995 in 1992-93 to Care and Repair Ltd. as the national co-ordinating body for HIAs with responsibility for monitoring performance, providing training and specialist advice to agencies and undertaking scheme development.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total value of the bids for funding of home improvement agencies in England, in each region, in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Sir George Young: The total values of the bids for funding of home improvement agencies in England, by region in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 are as follows:

Urban Partnership Fund

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities will receive assistance from the urban partnership fund; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the capital partnership programme.

Mr. Robin Squire [pursuant to the reply, 12 February 1993, c.834-35.]: An amended list of proposed projects for which we have offered support from the urban partnership fund has been placed in the Library today.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library on disk, and publish as soon as possible, a table showing for each local authority (a) its original estimate of capital receipts in 1992-93 and (b) its revised estimate capital receipts in 1992-93 recently supplied to his Department.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library a table showing the estimates of capital receipts in 1992-93 provided by each local authority on each of the three statistical returns received so far. All the estimates were made before the relaxation in the rules governing the use of capital receipts by local authorities which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement.

Credit Liabilities

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library on disk, and publish as soon as it is available, a table showing for each local authority and for each region the amount set aside by local authorities as provision for credit liabilities at 31 March 1992.

Mr. Howard: Yes, when the full set of data from authorities is available. In previous years this has been about 15 months after the date to which the information relates.

Police Areas (Populations)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the resident population of each police force area in England in 1981 and 1991; and what was the day-time working population for the City of London police force area in 1981 and 1991.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

Estimated resident populations of the police force areas in England in 1981 and 1991 are shown in the table. The day-time working population of the City of London was about 300,000 in 1981. The results from the 1991 census of population, which are required to provide a corresponding figure for that year, are expected later this year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Security Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what inquiries are made from the security services before appointments are made at Officer level in the House.

Mr. Beith: The security clearance procedures which apply to all staff of the House of Commons, whether Officers of the House or not, are directly analogous to those which apply to public servants. These were described in detail by the then Prime Minister on 24 July 1990 at columns 159-61.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many Adjournment debates on aspects of the security service took place in the Parliaments beginning in 1983 and 1987.

Mr. Newton: Three: on 4 April 1985, 3 December 1986 and 23 November 1988.

EDUCATION

School Meals (Newcastle)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each school in the city of Newcastle education authority area the percentage of children receiving free school meals.

Mr. Forth: The percentages of day pupils taking a free school meal in each maintained school in Newcastle local education authority on 16 January 1992 are shown in the table.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to permit an existing independent school to seek grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: It is the Government's intention to enable an existing independent school to propose that it be established as a new grant-maintained school, once the funding authority has a parallel responsibility for the provision of school places in the relevant area.

NATIONAL FINANCE

World Summit for Children

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the goals agreed at the world summit for children have had on public expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Portillo: The outcome of the world summit for children was one of many factors taken into account in setting the public expenditure plans for 1993-94.

Bus Fares (VAT)

190. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had about the impact of VAT on bus fares; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I have received a number of such representations in recent weeks, all of which are considered carefully.

Rugby Union Players

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 15 February, Official Report, column 23, what steps the Inland Revenue takes to ascertain the taxable income or benefits received by rugby union players as a result of their sporting activities.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue ascertains the taxable income or benefits received by rugby union players in the same way as for sums received by other sportsmen or women. Amounts shown on a player's tax return are taken into account in calculating any tax due. As with any other taxpayer, if there is any information, either in the tax return or received from other sources, which suggests that income may have been omitted, the Inland Revenue makes appropriate inquiries.

Parliamentary Questions (Cost)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to raise the advisory cost limit of £400 for answering parliamentary questions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The advisory cost limit was last increased in 1992—Official Report, 14 January 1992, column 546 —and is to be further increased to £450 from today. This increase has been rounded up to the nearest £50 for convenience of application.

The average cost of preparing answers to a parliamentary question—PQ—was last published in 1991 following a survey conducted by Treasury in that year—Official Report, 10 December 1991, column 369. These costs have been updated and are now assessed as £94 for a written PQ and £218 for an oral PQ. The 1991 comparative figures were £87 and £202 respectively.

The purpose and application of the advisory cost limit remain unchanged from 1992. It is intended to act as a threshold for disproportionate cost PQs. Any written PQ where the marginal cost of preparing the answer is considered likely to exceed the threshold may be referred to the appropriate Minister and an answer may be refused in whole or in part on the ground of disproportionate cost. Alternatively the Minister may decide that the PQ is to be answered irrespective of cost. There is no advisory limit for oral PQs.

The advisory limit continues to be around eight times the average marginal cost for written PQs, which is now £55.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the practice of the Valuation Office in the valuation of land where planning permission for the use of land for opencast extraction has been applied for but not been granted; and if he will make a statement on how those principles have been applied to Pwll Du.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 February 1993]: The ownership of coal passed to the National Coal Board in 1946, and although the British Coal Corporation-Opencast may make a compulsory rights order it is the corporation's policy to purchase land by agreement whenever possible.

The Valuation Office agency provides valuable advice to the corporation on many matters, including the purchase and management of land for opencast extraction.

Because the coal is already owned by the corporation, the granting of a planning permission for opencast extraction does not materially increase the value of the surface owner's interest, but he will normally be aware of the commercial realities of the situation and this may be reflected in the agreement between the parties.

The value of the vendor's interest is assessed by the local district valuer, and he will have full regard to the circumstances of the purchase, to any conditions to be imposed, to the planning position, and to the relative bargaining strengths of the parties concerned.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest quarterly figures for manufacturing output.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The index of manufacturing output at 1985 prices, seasonally adjusted, for the fourth quarter of 1992 was 111·2. It was 0·2 per cent. lower than in the previous quarter, but 0·4 per cent. higher than in the fourth quarter of 1991.

Unified Budget

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to introduce the first unified Budget; and what statutory changes he proposes to make as a consequence of the move to the new timetable.

Mr. Lamont: The White Paper on budgetary reform published in March 1992—Cm 1867—suggested that the unified Budget should be introduced in early December 1993. In order to allow more time for departments, local authorities and other bodies to translate the programme totals into management budgets the Government are planning on the basis that the Budget will be no later than the last week of November. The precise date will be announced nearer the time. Following the introduction of the new public expenditure procedures, the Government now believe that the annual local authority grant settlement proposals should be announced as soon as possible after the Budget. Discussions on this will take place with the local authority associations shortly. The Government will bring forward in the forthcoming Finance Bill two legislative changes needed as a consequence of the move to a unified Budget. Firstly, there is at present statutory provision for income tax personal allowances, the lower rate limit, the basic rate limit, the capital gains tax exempt amount, the inheritance tax threshold and the earnings cap for pensions to be raised in line with the retail prices index increase in the 12 months to December, unless Parliament decides otherwise. But the December RPI is not published until mid-January, so legislation is necessary to specify an indexation date which is known before the Budget. The Government propose to use the September RPI, published in mid-October, as the base month for statutory indexation from the 1994-95 tax year. The September RPI, is already used for uprating social security benefits. As now, Parliament will be able to override the statutory indexation provisions in the Finance Bill if it wishes. Secondly, the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act currently sets 5 August as the deadline for Royal Assent to the Finance Bill. As the Budget is moving forward by somewhat more than three months, the Government propose to amend this Act to move the deadline for Royal Assent forward by three months as well, to 5 May.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Sir John Cope: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels on 15 February. I represented the United Kingdom.

Following the conclusions of the Edinburgh European Council that openness in the Community should be increased, ECOFIN held its first open session, which was televised. Discussion focused on the need to promote economic recovery which included taking forward the package of measures to promote growth which had been agreed at the Edinburgh European Council. This initiative followed the announcement of measures to promote recovery in the Chancellor's autumn statement.

The Council later held a short discussion of measures taken by member states to promote recovery and concluded that these should be discussed more thoroughly at the next meeting on 15 March after further examination by the Monetary Commission.

Meanwhile consideration should be given to extending all convergence programmes to cover the period to 1996. (The Maastricht treaty provides for a Council assessment of convergence to take place no later than 31 December 1996.)

ECOFIN also considered two aspects of the future financing review: a progress report from the Danish presidency on negotiations with the European Parliament on a new inter-institutional agreement; and a presentation by the Commission of its legislative proposals to implement the Edinburgh future financing agreement.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Dispatches"

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 32, what proceedings have now been initiated following the Channel 4 "Dispatches" programme entitled "The Committee."

The Attorney-General: No criminal proceedings have been initiated in Northern Ireland by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary is preparing a police investigation file for submission to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland.

During the course of investigation into the matters raised in the programme an order was obtained by the Metropolitan police under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 requiring Channel 4 Television Limited and Box Productions Limited to produce certain documents. The companies declined and the Director of Public Prosecutions for England and Wales brought proceedings for contempt of court before the Divisional Court. Both companies were found to be in contempt and a fine of £75,000 was imposed. The Metropolitan police subsequently carried out a further investigation into the veracity of statements made in an affidavit by Ben Hamilton and filed in the contempt proceedings. Ben Hamilton was charged with perjury on 29 September 1992. Those proceedings were discontinued by the Crown prosecution service on 23 November 1992.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

The Attorney-General: There has been a reduction of six posts in the Departments for which I am responsible as a result of contracting out.

Pride of the Road

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the Crown prosecution service to be able to announce whether it will take action as a result of the information provided to it by South Yorkshire police in relation to the Pride of the Road bus company.

The Attorney-General: The file submitted by the South Yorkshire police is being considered by the Crown prosecution service in consultation with counsel. It is expected that a decision whether to institute criminal proceedings will be made shortly.

HEALTH

Cardiac Operations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of cardiac operations performed at hospitals within the Greater London area during the year 1992; and if he will list the hospitals performing this operation.

Mr. Sackville: Reliable estimates are not available for individual procedures at district health authority level, but data from the hospital episodes system suggest that about 28,500 heart operations were performed in Greater London in 1989-90. More recent information is not yet available.

Mental Health

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people have been received into guardianship under section 7 of the Mental Health Act 1983;

(2) in how many cases patients have failed to comply with the conditions of the guardianship under section 7 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Yeo: The table shows the number of cases in which patients were received into guardianship in England under section 7 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in each year from 1984-85. Information on the number of patients failing to comply with the conditions of guardianship is not collected centrally.

Contraception Pill

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the number of women taking the oral contraception pill.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. However, the general household survey, conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, indicates that in 1991, the most recent year for which figures are available, an estimated 23 per cent. of women aged 16 to 49 in Great Britain were taking an oral contraceptive pill.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, columns 376-77, to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo), if she will list the over the counter price for a month's supply of each brand of contraceptive pill; and if she will indicate the take-up of prescriptions for each convenient range of products according to hormone dosage.

Mr. Sackville: The contraceptive pill is not available over the counter. It is a prescription-only medicine. There are three main hormone dosage categories under which oral contraceptives are prescribed. The number of prescriptions issued for each of these categories in England in 1991 is given in the table.

Oral contraceptive precriptions by hormone dose England 1991

	Prescriptions (thousands)
Total for 50 micrograms of oestrogen	290·1
Total for under 50 micrograms of oestrogen	6,526·6
Total for progestrogen only	699·2

Psychiatric Patients

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average discharge rate from hospital for psychiatric patients.

Mr. Yeo: The table shows the estimated number of discharges of psychiatric patients by duration of stay from national health service hospitals in England from 1987-88 to 1989-90. The figures do not represent the number of patients as a person can be discharged more than once during a year.

Discharges by duration of stay 1987-88 to 1989-90—England

Duration of Stay	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Persons All durations	181,350	188,560	183,249
Under 1 month	117,960	121,550	118,155
1-3 months	45,250	46,700	45,347
3-12 months	14,250	15,140	15,049
1-2 years	1,590	1,830	1,628
2-3 years	550	550	580
3-5 years	400	540	591
5-10 years	430	670	525
10-15 years	180	320	287
15 years and over	750	1,240	1,086

Note:

The figures are estimates of finished district spells taken from the Hospital Episode Statistics (HES) System. A spell is a continuous stay of a patient in a hospital or hospitals in the district or special health authority. Each spell may be composed of one or more consultant episodes. Finished episodes are not identical to discharges since the latter includes transfers from one hospital to another.

Figures do not sum to the total due to rounding.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is made for emergency care in the case of patients suffering from schizophrenia.

Mr. Yeo: Health authorities, working with local authorities and the independent sector, should provide a comprehensive range of local services including sufficient in-patient provision for those who require emergency admission to hospital.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider the need for further measures to deal with mental illness within the community care programme, with particular reference to schizophrenia.

Mr. Yeo: We are considering whether new powers are needed to ensure that mentally ill people in the community, including those suffering from schizophrenia, receive the care they need, and whether the present powers are being used effectively.

The Department of Health and regional health authorities are monitoring implementation of the care programme approach for people with a severe mental illness which was introduced in April 1991.

Hospital Waste

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate she has made of the cost of updating all waste incinerators in trust hospitals that do not meet the current EC directives on waste incineration;

(2) how many trust hospitals have incinerators that do not meet the up-to-date standards of the EC directives on incineration;

(3) if she will hold talks with the trust authorities on their plans to bring hospital incinerators up to date with current EC directives on incineration; and what progress has been made thus far in that direction.

Mr. Sackville: Trusts and other health authorities are responsible for meeting relevant environmental legislation. The Department has issued strategic guidance alerting trusts to the legislation concerning the disposal of clinical waste and outlining the options for meeting it cost effectively.

All trusts and other health authorities have strategies for complying with current EC directives, implemented in the United Kingdom by the 1990 Environmental Protection Act, and progress is being monitored. In 1989, at prevailing prices, the cost of achieving the standards which come into force in 1995 was estimated to be £50 million for the national health service as a whole.

Information on incinerators operated by trust hospitals is not available centrally. All trusts have however reported compliance with the interim standards and 26 trusts have reported compliance with the 1995 standards. Plans being developed involve options such as incineration at plants operated by local authorities or private contractors, including jointly financed schemes.

Community Care

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will include representatives of local authority associations in the community care support force.

Mr. Yeo: The community care support force will be finishing its work at the end of March. At this stage, it would not be appropriate to change its membership.

Toxic Substances

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of deaths in the last five years from sniffing toxic substances; and what was the age range of those who died.

Dr. Mawhinney: The most recent figures available for deaths from solvent and volatile substance abuse are those for 1990. Publication of figures for 1991 is expected in March this year. The information is as follows:

Age	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990

Child Care, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she is now satisfied with the management arrangements for child care cases in Lambeth following the social services inspectorate report of April 1992.

Mr. Yeo: No. Following the social services inspectorate report of April 1992, Lambeth was asked to provide a report in September 1992. Lambeth's report showed that whilst a service improvement plan, including reorganisation of the department, had been developed and some progress made in implementing it, the level of unallocated casework remains unacceptably high. Lambeth has been asked to send a further report by 1 March 1993.

Dental Charges

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to introduce dental charges for pregnant women and nursing mothers who are currently exempt from making a contribution;

(2) what assessment she has made of the way in which pregnant women and nursing mothers benefit from receiving free dental health.

Mr. Sackville: The removal of the exemption from dental charges for pregnant women and nursing mothers was one option raised by Sir Kenneth Bloomfield in his fundamental review of dental remuneration.

The Government are undertaking wide consultation on the report and no decisions of any of the options have yet been made. At present pregnant women and nursing mothers benefit from not paying national health service dental charges, although some will be exempt on other grounds also.

"Making London Better"

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out her objectives in establishing the specialty reviews outlined in the document, "Making London Better"; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The aim of the specialty reviews is to achieve a more sensible distribution of six specialist services, providing a stronger service for patients and an improved academic base whilst avoiding unwarranted duplication.

The reviews will be conducted separately, but in parallel, and are to be completed by the end of May 1993. They will make recommendations for the future organisation of the six specialty services in London. They will also indicate the likely financial impact of their proposals and present their supporting evidence, analyses and judgment. Their reports will then be subject to review by Ministers before formal consultation on any significant proposals and final decisions by the autumn.

The reviews will be co-ordinated by the London implementation group. Each is being led by a distinguished clinician and a senior national health service manager of a purchasing authority, as follows:

CANCER SERVICES

Dr. Christopher Paine – Consultant Radiotherapist, Churchill Hospital, Oxford and President, Royal College of Radiologists.

Mr. Michael Bellamy – Ealing Hammersmith and Hounslow Commissioning Agency

CARDIAC SERVICES

Prof. Geoffrey Smith – Department of Cardiothoracic Surgery, University of Sheffield

Mr. John James – Parkside Health Authority

NEUROSCIENCES

Mr. Thomas Hide – Consultant, South General Hospital, Glasgow

Ms. Victoria Hardman – Bloomsbury and Islington Health Authority

PLASTICS

Mr. Philip Sykes – Consultant, St. Lawrence Hospital, Chepstow

Ms. Mary Whitty – Brent and Harrow Health Authority

RENAL SERVICES

Prof. Netar Mallick – Department of Renal Medicine, Manchester Royal Infirmary

Mr. Peter Coe – Tower Hamlets Health Authority

SPECIALITY CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Prof. Sir David Hull – Department of Child Health, University of Nottingham and President of British Paediatric Association

Mr. Martin Roberts – Wandsworth Health Authority

Gene Therapy

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to be in position to respond to the report of the committee on the ethics of gene therapy.

Mr. Sackville: Following careful consideration of the responses to wide-ranging consultation on the report of the committee on the ethics of gene therapy, the Government accept, in principle, the committee's recommendation.

The committee recommended that gene therapy research directed to the alleviation of genetic disease in individual patients should continue. However, it considered that genetic modification of the germ line, which would affect future generations, should not yet be attempted. The Government accept these recommendations.

The committee also recommended that, initially, gene therapy should be regarded as research and governed by the same exacting requirements which already apply in the United Kingdom to research involving human subjects. We accept this recommendation. The Government also agree with the committee that proposals to conduct gene therapy should be subject to independent peer review and that, if approved, the use of gene therapy in human subjects should be carefully monitored. These are important safeguards for the patient.

We intend setting up a new body, the gene therapy advisory committee. This committee will consider proposals to apply gene therapy to patients. In considering applications, it will work closely with the Medicines Control Agency and the other bodies which already have statutory responsibilities in the field of genetic modification. The gene therapy advisory committee will give particular attention to the ethical issues surrounding this important subject. The committee on the ethics of gene therapy recommended that this new body be non-statutory. The Government believe that this is right, but will, however, keep the need for statutory controls under review. The terms of reference and membership of the gene therapy advisory committee will be announced later.

The chairman, Sir Cecil Clothier, and the members of the committee on the ethics of gene therapy are to be congratulated for the important work they have done in producing their report. The Government are particularly grateful to the committee for the role it is currently undertaking in which it has already considered and approved the first proposal in the United Kingdom to use gene therapy on a patient. The committee has agreed to continue in being until the gene therapy advisory committee is established.

Gina Ditchman

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations were made into the death of Gina Ditchman at Horton hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Riverside health authority conducted an internal inquiry which was concluded in October 1990. I understand that certain aspects of the case have been raised with the Mental Health Act Commission which is currently considering them.

Female Circumcision

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken by the Government following the Prohibition of Female Circumcision Act 1985 as to (a) education, (b) prevention of female circumcision and (c) prosecution under the Act; and what level of funding has been allocated to the above since the Act came into force.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 14 January 1993 at column 807.

We have provided funding to FORWARD—the Foundation for Women's Health Research and Development—for several years, and for 1992-93 we have provided grants totalling £30,000.

NHS Performance Indicators

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her plans to introduce performance indicators for the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health publishes a wide range of comparative information about national health service performance and, over the past 10 years, a pack on health services indicators. Copies are available in the Library. The Department continues to develop and improve the ways in which it manages NHS performance.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what records her Department keeps of the value of land, buildings and other assets transferred to national health service trusts; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements she makes to apply uniform criteria to establish the value of land, buildings and other assets before they are transferred to a national health service trust; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The values of land, buildings and other assets transferred to a national health service trust are determined in order to form the originating capital debt of that trust. These values are audited and provided to the Department for use in the statutory instrument which is laid before the House for each wave of trusts. Thereafter the values are recorded in the annual accounts of the trusts.

Valuations of all property assets—land and buildings—being transferred to NHS trusts are prepared by the Valuation Office agency. This ensures a co-ordinated national approach to the valuation of these assets. The value of other assets transferred such as equipment is taken from the asset register maintained by health authorities in accordance with departmental guidelines.

Pathology Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make pathology services subject to privatisation; and if she will list all instances of such services being privatised in the last two years.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for the hospitals and other national health service users of pathology services to decide the best means of obtaining services which provide quality and value for money. Information is not held centrally about the arrangements for the provision of pathology services.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations underlay the decision to allow oil companies to nominate areas that they wished to see offered in the 14th round of offshore licensing.

Mr. Eggar: A major aim of the 14th round of licensing is to encourage activity in little explored areas of the United Kingdom continental shelf. Exploration in little understood areas is risky. It makes sense for those who take the risks to have a say in the choice of acreage to be offered.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account his Department took of the United Kingdom's international commitments on oil pollution standards and marine conservation in the 14th round of offshore licensing.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom is fully committed to its international obligations relating to oil pollution standards and marine conservation. Special conditions applied to licences reflect this commitment.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide publicly available the environmental statements provided by oil companies as part of their licence applications for the 14th round of offshore licensing.

Mr. Eggar: The environmental policy statements from individual companies form part of their licence applications and are commercially confidential.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to improve public scrutiny of the offshore licensing process.

Mr. Eggar: Each licensing round is considered separately. Extensive consultations take place before each offshore round. As onshore licensees are subject to the planning regime, prior consultation is not necessary.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the changes in regulations on oil and gas field development and production, announced by the Minister for Energy on 22 October 1992, will apply to the environmental safeguards contained in the licensing application process; and whether those changes will apply to the monitoring of oil companies' compliance with the environmental safeguards in their licence conditions.

Mr. Eggar: None of the measures to be introduced to streamline my Department's procedures for regulating oil and gas development and production will involve any change to the arrangements currently applied for safeguarding the environment.

Environmental Technology

Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what was the initial three-year budget of his Department's environmental technology innovation scheme in October 1990; and how much has been spent to date;

(2) when he expects to finalise the environmental technology innovation scheme budget for the next financial year.

Mr. Eggar: The initial budget for the environmental technology innovation scheme—ETIS—was £12 million divided equally between my Department and the Department of the Environment. Of the £2·96 million my Department has committed on approved projects £570,935 has been spent to date.

With regard to the budget for the next financial year, allocations under the Department's innovation budget will be made in the light of the priorities for the Department's science and technology expenditure, and the public expenditure outturn figures for 1992-93. For these reasons, the exact timing for a decision on the ETIS budget for the next financial year is not settled at this stage.

Electricity Supply

Mr. McFall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from trade and industry expressing concern about the potential postponement of the present franchise to electricity users in the 1Mw to 100Kw bracket; and if he will seek consultation with the British Retail Consortium on this issue.

Mr. Eggar: I have received a number of representations on this issue. These are being considered as part of the coal review.

Oil Transhipment

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental impact assessment he has made of the transhipment of oil by BP by pipeline from the Seillean to oil tanks in waters off Scapa Flow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The transhipment referred to relates to a ship-to-ship transfer of oil within the sheltered waters of Scapa Flow. This was authorised by the Orkney Islands council, as the harbour authority, after consultation with the oil pollution liaison committee on which Scottish National Heritage and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds are represented. The transhipments were only permitted in good weather and with pollution prevention vessels in attendance. Vessels were escorted in and out of Scapa Flow by two tugs. Neither the Department of Transport nor the Department of Trade and Industry requires an environmental impact assessment for these operations.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines he has issued or intends to issue to British Coal on the acquisition and sale of property by British Coal where planning permission for opencast coal extraction has been applied for but not given.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 15 February 1993]: I have no proposals for such guidelines. Acquisition or sale of property by British Coal in connection with coal extraction or in connection with proposals for such extraction is an operational matter for the corporation.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the radiologically significant materials extracted by the enhanced actinide removal plant at Sellafield, mentioned at page 33 of his Department's annual report 1993, Cm. 2204, will be disposed of.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The radiologically significant materials, which British Nuclear Fuels plc proposes to remove from Sellafield's sea discharges by use of the site's enhanced actinide removal plant, will be in the form of an intermediate level waste sludge. This will be encapsulated within stainless steel drums for storage and eventual disposal in Nirex's proposed deep underground disposal facility.

European Regional Funding

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has had about certain regions of the United Kingdom qualifying for objective 1 status in European funding regimes;

(2), pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities on 10 February, Official Report, column 1009, which regions of the United Kingdom he now considers poor enough to qualify for objective 1 status for European funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The Government have received representations from several hon. Members, local authorities, and others. Qualification for objective 1 does not only depend on gross domestic product. Other factors may be taken into account, such as peripherality.

Concerning the regions that the Government believe should become eligible for objective 1 grants, I refer the hon. Member to the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) on 17 February.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to have discussions with the European Commission about redrawing the regional map of Europe with regard to funding criteria for EC structural funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 February 1993]: I understand that the European Commission hopes to adopt its proposals for revised structural funds regulations soon. The Council of Ministers will consider the proposals in the late spring or summer.

Decisions on eligibility under the objectives of the funds must await the adoption of the regulations by the Council of Ministers.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 18 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 18 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on (a) the structure, (b) the number and civil service rank of personnel on the staff and (c) the timing of the inquiry under Lord Justice Scott.

The Prime Minister: Lord Justice Scott is supported by a team of eight of which the civil service members comprise:

1 Assistant Solicitor (Grade 5)
1 Press Officer (Part Time) (Grade 6)
1 Grade 7
1 Executive Officer
1 Administrative Officer
1 Personal Secretary

The timing and structure of the inquiry is a matter for Lord Justice Scott. He has made it clear that he wishes to report to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade as soon as possible.

Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of 12 February, by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Official Report, column 841-42, what plans he has to meet Mr. Salman Rushdie; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, met Mr. Rushdie on 4 February. He underlined our full support for Mr. Rushdie's fundamental rights. The fatwa issued by Ayatollah Khomeini and reaffirmed by senior figures in Iran is a serious violation of international law. The continuing failure of the Iranian authorities to repudiate this incitement to murder inevitably prevents the establishment of full and friendly relations with Iran.

Terrorism

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister in what circumstances British citizens living in the United Kingdom are asked to contribute to the cost of police security when their lives are threatened by terrorists.

The Prime Minister: It is for the chief officer of police to decide whether it is appropriate to provide police officers to protect individuals. The individuals concerned would not be asked to contribute to the cost of these officers.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had concerning the future of the Housing Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I regularly discuss with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment the delivery of the Government's housing policy, in which the Housing Corporation continues to play an important part.

Chemical Warfare

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the export of materials and equipment which could be or is thought to be suitable for making chemical weapons; what monitoring takes place; what assessment is made of end-user certificates in such circumstances; and if he will lay before Parliament regulations for the export of such items.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 February 1993]: The 54 chemical weapon precursor chemicals and the dual use chemical plant and equipment identified as of proliferation concern are specified in and controlled under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992. In addition, other, unlisted items, though normally of no proliferation concern, do require a licence if the exporter knows or suspects that they are intended or likely to be used in connection with weapons of mass destruction. All export licence applications are carefully considered: information on destinations and end users is always taken into account. Compliance by exporters with these controls is monitored by the compliance unit of the Department of Trade and Industry.

SCOTLAND

Public Appointments

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of his appointees to public bodies are women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Figures in "Public Bodies"—published on 29 January 1993; copy available in the Library—show that at 1 September 1992, 36 per cent. of those appointed to public bodies under the auspices of the Scottish Office were women. Of those appointments directly controlled by the Secretary of State —that is, leaving aside those members nominated or appointed by other organisations—40 per cent. were held by women. The Government aim to increase the number of public appointments held by women, while continuing to make all appointments on the basis of aptitude and merit.

WALES

Certificate of Education

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he held with educational bodies and schools in Wales over his proposal to withdraw the certificate of education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The decision to phase out the certificate of education was based on advice received from the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) on the national curriculum statutory arrangements for GCSE and other assessments for 16-year-old pupils at end of key stage 4. SEAC advised that the certificate of education would not meet the national curriculum requirements. The statutory annual consultation with LEAs and examining groups on the list of approved qualifications for use in schools will take place later this month.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of firms in Wales employing 20 or more employees have (a) employed a 3 per cent. quota of registered disabled people and (b) been issued bulk exemption permits under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, for each year from 1979 to the present.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested, where available, is given in the following table. The data cover employers with headquarters in Wales and those with establishments only in Wales.

	Percentage of employers with 20 or more workers who employed at least 3 per cent. registered disabled people on 1 June	Percentage of employers with 20 or more workers issued with bulk permits during the 12 months to 1 June[1]

[1] The issue of a bulk permit does not exempt the employer from their duties and obligations under the 1944 Act. Bulk permits are issued in accordance with the Act. They enable an employer who is below quota to engage a specified number of people who are not registered as disabled, during a period of up to 6 months, and remain within the law. Employers who are below quota, and who have not been issued with permits, are not necessarily breaking the law.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of senior administrative positions in each of the health authorities of Wales are held by women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the following table. The figures are based on staff on senior manager pay scales (general managers, senior managers and managers) in the administrative and clerical staff group.

Percentage of staff as at 30 September 1992 on senior manager pay scales who were women

NHS (Wales) has joined the Opportunity 2000 campaign promoted by Business in the Community which aims to improve the quality and quantity of women in the work force. Targets for improving the balance of women in NHS management will be published during 1993.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 341, what proposals he has to provide assistance comparable to that given by the independent living fund to those of pensionable age with Alzheimer's and other similar conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the community care arrangements which will operate from 1 April 1993, it will be for local authorities to assess the needs of those requiring care and make appropriate arrangements in conjunction with other agencies, the individuals concerned and their families. The development of services for people with Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia is the responsibility of joint county planning teams established under the mental illness strategy.

Further Education Colleges (Equipment)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to replace out-of-date practical equipment in further education colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Further Education Funding Council for Wales has commissioned a survey of further education colleges' equipment needs. The information obtained from the survey has been taken into account by the council in deciding what part of its funding for capital expenditure it should allocate for equipment. The council has identified resources of £1·5 million for allocation to the colleges for equipment purchases in the financial year 1993-94.

Community Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he proposes to increase participation in community education in each of the local education authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The provisions of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 divide the responsibility for providing further education, including community education, between the Further Education Funding Council for Wales (FEFCW) and the local education authorities. From 1 April 1993 the FEFCW will be responsible for ensuring that there is adequate provision of the types of course listed in schedule 2 of the Act; and the local education authorities will continue to have a duty to provide other types of courses—mainly leisure and recreational courses. The local education authorities have retained the resources for non-schedule 2 courses and have full discretion to decide for themselves what provision they make in their own areas.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to narrow the gap between vocational and academic studies consequent upon the introduction of national vocational qualifications.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Accreditations from the National Council for Vocational Qualifications (NCVQ) now cover over 80 per cent. of the work force and all occupational groups at NVQ levels 1 to 4. The NCVQ is also developing a more broadly-based vocational qualification, the general national vocational qualification (GNVQ). A number of schools and colleges are piloting GNVQs during this academic year. GNVQs are being designed to provide a vocational qualification representing an achievement which is equivalent to two 'A' levels. Current NCVQ plans are that 14 GNVQs should be generally available by September 1995, when they should have equal status with 'A' levels.

General Practitioners

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners there were in each county and in total in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is given in the following table.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospital beds there were in each specialty in each county and in the whole of Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on the number of beds (average daily available) in each health authority of Wales by specialty for the calendar years 1979 to 1987 and the financial years 1984-85 to 1990-91 has been published on an annual basis in "Hospital Bed Use Statistics" copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Information for 1991-92 is given in the following table.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the figure for male unemployment in Newport, Gwent at the latest available date.

Mr. David Hunt: In January 1993 there were 8,009 male unemployed claimants in the Newport travel-to-work area, and 6,360 men unemployed in the borough of Newport.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Tribunals

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current time lag in the hearing of appeals by the independent tribunal service.

Mr. Burt: In 1991, the last year for which complete figures are available, the average appeals clearance time from lodgment to the date of hearing were:

	Weeks
Social Security Appeals Tribunals:	24
Medical Appeals Tribunals:	35·2

Absent Fathers

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the operational guidelines for DSS officials to use when assessing whether, under regulations relating to the Child Support Act 1991, a mother or her children would face harm or undue distress if she were required to disclose details of an absent father.

Mr. Burt: Yes. The guidelines will be published before the launch of the agency on 5 April 1993.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total spending during each year since 1979-80 on income support and supplementary benefit payments towards the cost of residential or nursing care, including estimates for the current financial year; and if he will set out the percentage change since 1979-80 deflated by the change in numbers of (i) people of pensionable age and (ii) those over 75 years of age.

Mr. Burt: Such information as is available is in the table.

Reliable data on an age basis is not available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the likely total expenditure on income support payments towards the costs of care in residential or nursing homes during the current financial year.

Mr. Burt: The latest estimate given in the departmental report for 1992-93 is £2,530 million.

Carers

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the proportion of the total social security budget which will be spent on the invalid care allowance and the carer premium in 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: Our present estimate is 0·5 per cent.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that take-up campaign information for carers' benefits should be available in (a) the Welsh language, (b) languages of ethnic minority communities within the United Kingdom and (c) Braille.

Mr. Scott: The publicity of carers' benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 17 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security regarding the availability of publicity information on carer's benefits in (a) the Welsh language, (b) languages of the ethnic minority communities within the United Kingdom and (c) in Braille.

The Benefits Agency currently provides publicity information on the main benefit for carers, Invalid Care Allowance (ICA), in eleven ethnic languages—Arabic, Bengali, Chinese, Greek, Gujarati, Hindi, Punjabi, Somali, Turkish, Urdu and Vietnamese. This information is also available in the Welsh language and in Braille.

Although there are no plans at present for the main carers leaflet FB31 "Caring for someone?" to be translated into the other languages listed above, there will be an April 1993 edition in Welsh. The leaflet is also being considered for translation into Braille from April 1993 when a new edition of the leaflet is published.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Farmers

9. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the numbers of full and part-time farmers.

Mr. Hanley: In the June 1992 agricultural census in Northern Ireland 22,215 farmers, partners and directors were identified as full-time and 12,309 as part-time.

Security Forces (Manpower)

10. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on current manpower levels for the security forces in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: At 31 December 1992 there were 13,071 police, and 18,741 members of the armed forces operating in their support, in Northern Ireland. These manpower levels are kept under constant review.

Widgery Tribunal

11. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will order a re-examination of the findings of the Widgery tribunal.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: No. I have nothing to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) on 21 January at col. 483.

Aldergrove Airport

12. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals for privatising Aldergrove airport.

Mr. Atkins: On 20 November 1991, my predecessor announced the Government's plans to sell Northern Ireland Airports Limited, the publicly owned company which operates Belfast international airport. Legislation is in hand to give effect to privatisation and a draft order will be published in May of this year. The timetable envisages the order being made early in 1994 with the sale of the company taking place later that year.

Remand Prisoners

13. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average detention period being served by remand prisoners in Crumlin Road prison.

Mr. Mates: Figures are not available in the form sought. However the Government are concerned about the length of time some prisoners spend on remand and have introduced a number of measures to deal with the problem, including the target time limits scheme announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 10 June 1992.

Homelessness

14. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he proposes to alleviate homelessness in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The Housing Executive has statutory responsibility for dealing with homelessness, and arranges both temporary and permanent accommodation throughout Northern Ireland. Its housing selection scheme gives top priority particularly to families accepted as homeless. In addition, the Executive and other local bodies provide extensive advice to those who are homeless, or are threatened with homelessness. I am satisfied that these arrangements are appropriate in dealing with homelessness in Northern Ireland.

Quangos

15. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many quasi-autonomous non-governmental bodies existed in Northern Ireland (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992 and (c) at present.

Mr. Mates: In 1991 and 1992 there were 121 non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland and this figure remains unchanged.

Inter-party Discussions

16. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the present status of the inter-party discussions on the future of Northern Ireland.

Political Initiatives

25. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new political initiatives he has in respect of Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: When the talks ended in November last year, all the participants agreed that further dialogue was both necessary and desirable. Accordingly, every effort is being made to create conditions under which further talks can take place at an early date. To this end, contacts are being maintained with all the participants at various levels.

EC Funding

17. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has made to the European Commission regarding funding of projects in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: My right hon. and learned Friend and ministerial colleagues are in contact with the Commission as and when the interests of Northern Ireland require it. I myself shall be meeting Commissioner Millan next week to discuss support from the Community's structural funds for Northern Ireland during the next round of funding.

Rented Housing

18. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the number of houses made available for rent in Northern Ireland for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Atkins: The number of houses made available for rent in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and by registered housing associations is as follows:

13,304 houses in 1982-83; 13,972 in 1983-84; 13,466 in 1984-85; 13,486 in 1985-86; 12,701 in 1986-87; 11,971 in 1987-88; 12,158 in 1988-89; 11,559 in 1989-90; 14,180 in 1990-91 and 14,269 in 1991-92.

The figures comprise new build completions and relets for both the Housing Executive and registered housing associations except in the case of associations where relet figures are not available prior to 1990-91.

Figures relating to the private rented sector are not available.

Northern Ireland Railways

19. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the future of Northern Ireland Railways.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have demonstrated their commitment to the future of railways in Northern Ireland through schemes for a cross-harbour rail link in Belfast, the accelerated upgrading of the Belfast to Dublin railway and the provision of a new railway station at Great Victoria street, Belfast.

In addition we are currently examining the consultant's report about the scope for introducing a private element into the management and operation of Northern Ireland Railways.

Labour Statistics

20. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the level of unemployment in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I receive representations from time to time from a variety of interested organisations and individuals.

The Government's economic development strategy for Northern Ireland aims to help industry become more competitive so that it can achieve soundly based growth and provide more good quality jobs. A wide range of assistance is available to this end. Figures released today show that the level of seasonally adjusted unemployment in Northern Ireland remained unchanged (at 107,000) in January and has declined by an average of 200 over the past three months.

Security

21. Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were charged with terrorist murders in Northern Ireland in 1992.

Mr. Mates: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend).

23. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend).

Small Firms

22. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next plans to meet representatives of the small firms sector to discuss lifting burdens on business.

Mr. Atkins: I am in regular contact with the business community which enables me to gain its views on all matters affecting the competitiveness of Northern Ireland companies. I will be raising the specific issue of the burden of regulations with key business people over the next few months.

Education

24. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on proposed changes in education.

Mr. Hanley: Representations have been made by the education and library boards, school boards of governers, teachers and their representatives and some parents. I have also met a number of groups on reforms-related matters. They have covered a wide range of issues related to the reforms, but have centered mainly on the pressures on teachers and schools resulting from the curriculum and assessment changes and I have taken measures where necessary to ease the pressures.

Health and Personal Social Services

26. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the implementation of the Government's regional strategy document for Northern Ireland health and personal social services for 1992 to 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Following the publication in November 1991 of the 1992-1997 regional strategy each board produced an area strategy which endorsed the priorities and targets it contained. Since then the Eastern and Southern boards have undertaken major reviews of the acute hospital services required by their population. They are currently consulting widely on their proposals for the future of these important services before making final decisions.

The annual management plan, issued by the HPSS management executive, sets a range of interim objectives and targets based on those in the regional strategy. The boards' purchasing prospectuses in turn reflect the content of the management plan and specify the level of services that boards wish to purchase in pursuit of strategic goals.

In addition to those targets which boards can act on immediately, there are a number of objectives and targets in the regional strategy where collaborative work would be of value. The regional strategy advisory group, under the chairmanship of the HPSS chief executive, has been established to take forward work in these areas.

The regional strategy also recognises the important role that other government Departments have to play in improving the health and social well-being of the population. An inter-departmental group on health issues has been established under the chairmanship of the permanent secretary of the Department of Health and Social Services.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

27. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect on security co-operation with the Republic of Ireland of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Mates: Since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, there have been significant enhancements in cross border security co-operation, and the Government will continue to work closely with the Government of the Republic to achieve further improvements. Both Governments recognise the importance of keeping existing measures under review and making further progress whenever possible.

Unemployment

28. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he proposes to take to reduce unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Reducing unemployment in Northern Ireland depends on the achievement of higher levels of economic growth and on Northern Ireland industry becoming more internationally competitive. The main features of the Government's strategy to achieve this include identifying and removing obstacles to growth; encouraging inward investment; building up management and work force skills; developing an enterprise culture and supporting innovation and research and development. Help is available in each of these areas for activities which will improve business performance.

Miscarriages of Justice

29. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consider setting up an independent body in Northern Ireland to consider cases of miscarriages of justice.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Royal Commission on Criminal Justice is currently examining the arrangements in England and Wales for considering and investigating alleged miscarriages of justice when appeal rights have been exhausted. When the Royal Commission's recommendations are made known I shall give careful consideration to what application they may have in the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland.

Constitutional Discussions

30. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland about constitutional matters; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North East (Mr. Barnes).

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of employees in his Department are registered disabled.

Mr. Mates: There are no registered disabled staff in the small cadre of home civil servants employed in the Northern Ireland Office.

On 13 January 1993, 1·6 per cent. of the Northern Ireland civil service (NICS) were registered disabled. In addition, 60 registered disabled people were working in the NICS under the sheltered placement scheme.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Mates: Including the Northern Ireland Departments, 575 full-time and 434 part-time posts have been contracted out.

English Teaching

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the teaching of English in the schools of the Province.

Mr. Hanley: The teaching of English in schools in Northern Ireland is now based on the programmes of study for English which reflect the best practice in our classrooms. These give appropriate prominence to the teaching of grammar, spelling and writing and promote from the earliest years reading for pleasure and information from a wide variety of texts. The Northern Ireland Curriculum Council has set in place arrangements to monitor the introduction of the new programmes of study and these will be reviewed and updated as necessary in the light of the council's findings.

Fair Employment Act

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the certificates that have been issued by him under section 42 of the Fair Employment Act 1976 in the past 10 years, indicating the person or body the certificate related to and whether the certificate was issued on the ground of (a) national security, (b) public safety or (c) public order.

Mr. Atkins: In the past 10 years 18 section 42 certificates have been signed by or on behalf of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Seven cases involved either the Northern Ireland Office or Northern Ireland Departments while the other 11 involved public bodies in Northern Ireland.

Information on the ground on which each certificate was issued is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have received advice from the Fair Employment Commission under section 29(1) of the Fair Employment Act 1976.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 2,041 from 1 January 1990 until 31 January 1993.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been refused assistance under section 29(2) of the Fair Employment Act 1976 by the Fair Employment Commission, showing in each case the perceived religious affiliation of those refused and the grounds on which assistance was refused.

Mr. Atkins: During the period 1 January 1990 until 31 January 1993 assistance or further assistance under section 29(2) has been refusesd to 47 persons, of whom 33 were Roman Catholic and 14 were Protestant. Assistance was refused where (i) the investigation of the complaint had revealed no sustainable case, (ii) assistance to pursue the complaint would have conflicted with the commission's statutory functions, (iii) the complainant failed to co-operate or keep in contact with the commission or (iv) the complainant had approached the commission at such an advanced stage that the giving of assistance was impracticable. It is not appropriate to state the grounds on which such refusal was based in individual instances.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have received assistance from the Fair Employment Commission under section 29(2) of the Fair Employment Act 1976.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 768 from 1 January 1990 until 31 January 1993.

Mr. Seamus McElwaine

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the terrorist activities of Seamus McElwaine and the circumstances of his death.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The circumstances surrounding the death of Seamus McElwaine in an encounter with the security forces on 26 April 1986 near Rosslea, County Fermanagh, were investigated by the police. The Director of Public Prosecutions considered the police investigation report, and directed no prosectuion of any of the soldiers involved. Following the inquest held on 11-12 January 1993 the director has asked for a further report from the police in light of the inquest jury's findings. It would, therefore, be inappropriate for me to comment further.

EMPLOYMENT

TECs

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the budget for each of the training and enterprise councils in 1992-93; and what the budget will be for each TEC for 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: Details of TEC budgets for 1992-93 are given in the tables. The £2·1 billion planned expenditure for programmes operated by TECs and LECs is over £100 million more than was spent in 1991-92.

The information for TEC budgets for 1993-94 is not yet available. We are currently in negotiations with TECs on targets and funding for 1993-94.

Industrial Tribunals

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases were brought before industrial tribunals in each year since 1979 under (a) the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, provisions relating to (1) unfair dismissal, (2) redundancy pay, (3) contract of employment, (4) trade union activities and (5) other provisions, (b) the Equal Pay Act 1970, (c) the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, (d) the Race Relations Act 1976, (e) the Employment Act 1980, (f) the Employment Act 1988 and (g) the Wages Act 1986 and (h) the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following tables show the information available on applications in Great Britain. Before 1 April 1985 the information was collected in calendar years. Since then it has been collected in financial years. The industrial tribunals do not currently have the jurisdiction to hear contract of employment claims.

Wages Councils

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of firms inspected by wages councils in 1990-91 were prosecuted for illegal rates of pay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1990-91, the time and wage records of 33,032 employers' establishments were inspected by wages inspectors. The great majority were found to be complying with the law. Of the firms prosecuted, four were prosecuted for failing to pay not less than the statutory minimum remuneration required by wages orders.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) on 4 November, Official Report, columns 298-99, which of the studies listed she assesses as showing a positive link between the existence of statutory minimum pay rates and the loss of or failure to create jobs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The main studies in the United Kingdom which provide supporting evidence are as follows:

Labour Statistics

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many constituencies in the United Kingdom have higher registered unemployment at the present time than in April 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unemployment data for parliamentary constituencies are available from June 1983 only, and on the unadjusted basis, and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Benefit Statistics

Mrs. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are in receipt of unemployment benefit while working or studying for more than 24 hours per week in the constituency of Paisley, North.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mrs. Irene Adams, dated 18 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the number of people in receipt of unemployment benefit while working or studying for more than 24 hours per week in the constituency of Paisley North. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, I am unable to provide the information you have requested as data about the number of people who are in receipt of unemployment benefit while working or studying for more than 24 hours per week is not collated or published.

I am sorry I cannot be of help on this occasion.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assumptions were made in the public expenditure survey figures published on 12 November 1992 for the average cost of criminal legal aid bills in the magistrates courts to be paid in 1993-94.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is estimated that the average cost of criminal legal aid bills in the magistrates courts in 1993-94 would be £484 if the current rates and levels of fees were maintained.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will provide a detailed breakdown of savings to be achieved from his proposed changes to legal aid eligibility.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is estimated that the measures announced by the Lord Chancellor on 12 November 1992 will reduce legal aid expenditure by £43 million in 1993-94, £110 million in 1994-95, and £173 million in 1995-96. It is not possible to provide separate figures for all the individual proposals, since most of them are interdependent and can only be costed together.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the estimate for the average cost of criminal legal aid bills in the magistrates courts paid in 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On the latest information, the average cost of a criminal legal aid bill in the magistrates courts in 1992-93 is estimated to be £459.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what was the cost to legal aid in each case prosecuted by the Metropolitan police fraud investigation group in which the legal bills were determined after 1 April 1992;

(2) what was the cost to legal aid for each case prosecuted by the Serious Fraud Office in which the legal aid bills were paid after 1 April 1992.

Mr. John M. Taylor It is not possible to identify individual cases prosecuted by the Metropolitan police fraud investigation group and the Serious Fraud Office from information held centrally by my Department. It is therefore not possible to identify the total amount paid from legal aid from 1 April 1992 in cases being brought by the Metropolitan police fraud investigation group or Serious Fraud Office.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will state for each magistrates court in England and Wales what percentage of applications for criminal legal aid was refused on merit in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information on the grant of criminal legal aid in magistrates courts for 1991, which is the latest year for which figures are available, was published on 4 August 1992. Copies are available in the Library. The figures do not distinguish between refusals on grounds of merits and on means.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the effect on costs to the court system of changes in the numbers of litigants in person appearing before the civil and criminal courts resulting from the proposed changes in arrangements in legal aid elegibility.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Very little effect is expected on criminal legal aid as a result of the eligibility changes. So far as civil legal aid is concerned, the Department does not envisage that there will be any significant increase in the number of unrepresented litigants.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish the advice tendered to the Lord Chancellor by his advisory committee on legal aid about the proposed changes to the arrangements for legal aid eligibility.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The legal aid advisory committee has already made public its advice to the Lord Chancellor on the proposed eligibility changes and the Lord Chancellor's response to its advice. I have placed copies of the correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what was the number of grants of criminal legal aid for magistrates courts in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992;

(2) how many legal aid orders were granted for each magistrates court for which information is available (a) between October and December 1991 and (b) between October and December 1992.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of grants of criminal legal aid for magistrates courts in 1991, as published in the Lord Chancellor's Department "Judicial Statistics" (1991 edition, table 10·2), was 514,000. The figure for 1992 is not yet available, but is estimated to be 513,000.

The number of legal aid orders granted for each magistrates' court for which information is available, from 355 courts, between October and December 1991 was as follows:

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his Department's estimate of the number of (a) contributory civil legal aid certificates and (b) non-contributory civil legal aid certificates to be issued in 1993-94 if (i) the financial conditions remain unchanged and (ii) the Lord Chancellor's proposals announced on 12 November are introduced.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is estimated that in 1993-94 283,000 civil legal aid certificates will be issued of which 198,000 will be non-contributory and 85,000 contributory. If eligibility conditions had not been changed, it is estimated that 410,000 certificates would have been issued in 1993-94 of which about 330,000 would have been non-contributory and 80,000 contributory.

Women Judges

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) Lords of Appeal, (b) heads of division, (c) High Court, for each of its three divisions, (d) Crown court, (e) circuit and (f) district judges and stipendiry magistrates there are in total; and how many in each category are women.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total number and the number of women in these categories as at 1 February 1993 were as follows:

	Men	Women	Total
Lords of Appeal in Ordinary	10	0	10
Lords Justices of Appeal	27	1	28
Heads of divisions (excluding the Lord Chancellor)	4	0	4

	Men	Women	Total
High court judges	79	4	83
of whom: Chancery Division	13	0	13
Family Division	13	2	15
Queen's Bench Division	53	2	55
Circuit judges	463	24	487
District judges	250	19	269
Metropolitan stipendiary magistrates	41	7	48
Provincial stipendiary magistrates	28	2	30

Circuit judges sit in both county courts and the crown court.

Tribunals

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he intends to take to ensure that more people from ethnic minority communities in the London borough of Waltham Forest are appointed to all tribunals under the independent tribunal service; and what is the present composition of all tribunals serving Waltham Forest.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To encourage more ethnic minority practitioners to come forward for consideration, the Lord Chancellor has made widely available to ethnic minority practitioners and representative groups the booklet which sets out the requirements for each appointment and describes the judicial appointments system generally.

The Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint to judicial office those best qualified, regardless of sex, ethnic origin, political affiliation or religion and appointments must be justified on merit. The Lord Chancellor appoints only the legal chairmen of the tribunals under the independent tribunal service.

Information held on the ethnic origin of 18 members of the social security appeal tribunal in Walthamstow, which serves Waltham Forest, shows that three out of the 18 are from ethnic minorities.

Figures are not kept separately for that area for the other tribunals under the service. For the whole South Eastern region, one out of 105 members of the medical appeal tribunals/vaccine damage tribunals and 66 out of 454 members of the disability appeal tribunals are from the ethnic minorities.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Royal Family (Publicity)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what, for the latest available year, was the cost to his Department of expenditure in support of the royal family in respect of publicity services.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers given on 11 December 1992, Official Report, column 801, and 14 January 1993, Official Report, columns 767-78. The cost of work undertaken for the royal household by the Central Office of Information in 1991-92 for press facilities totalled £318,260, excluding VAT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Recycling

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what proportion of waste from the Houses of Parliament is currently recycled; and what plans he has to improve that proportion.

Mr. Ray Powell: It is not possible to say precisely what proportion of total waste from the Houses of Parliament, which includes kitchen refuse, is recycled, but all paper and glass is collected by a contractor and recycled. Arrangements have been made during the past year for metal cans to be collected and sorted off site so that they, too, can be recycled. The Parliamentary Works Department also retains reusable timber and metal from building projects. Proposals are currently being sought for the collection and recycling of plastics, although it is too early to say whether any of these will prove viable.

Stationery

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what arrangements are in hand to secure the supply of stationery to hon. and right hon. Members following the receivership of one of the suppliers.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Expenditure

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what has been the expenditure on participants in (a) employment action and (b) employment training in each year of operation;

(2) what has been the expenditure on providers in (a) employment action and (b) employment training in each year of operation;

(3) what has been the total expenditure, including administrative costs, on (a) employment action and (b) employment training, in each year of operation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested. The Department contracts with training and enterprise councils (TECs) to provide agreed numbers of training weeks for employment action and employment training and outputs for employment training at agreed unit prices.

Total expenditure on both programmes, excluding administrative costs, in each year of operation is shown in the following table. The Department does not record separate administrative costs on a programme basis.

Expenditure on employment training and employment action
Great Britain

£ million

Year	Employment training	Employment action
1988-89	425	—
1989-90	1,107	—
1990-91	1,076	—
1991-92	842	16
1992-93[1]	807	178

Tourism

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps her Department has taken to implement the recommendations of "Tourism in the United Kingdom: Realising the Potential" as it applies to her Department's responsibilities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A healthy tourism sector is vital to the United Kingdom economy. The Employment Department, TECs, industry training organisations and the National Council for Vocational Qualifications are working together to ensure that individuals have the necessary skills to support the industry's needs.

National vocational qualifications and Scottish vocational qualifications are now available for most occupations in the tourism and leisure sector. Following the introduction of general national vocational qualifications (GNVQs) last year 56 centres are now offering the GNVQ in tourism and leisure with 19 per cent. of all candidates undertaking the Leisure and Tourism option. A tourism and leisure consortium was formed in April 1992 with representatives from a wide range of organisations and this group is considering industrywide approaches to qualifications in the sector and how their implementation might best be achieved.

Voluntary Sector

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been employed in the voluntary sector in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: Neither the Employment Department nor the Home Office, which is generally responsible for liaison with the voluntary sector, records data on the number of waged people employed in voluntary organisations.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she will reach a decision regarding the future of the construction industry training board; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Wages

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many companies in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole have been found to be paying below minimum rates set by wages councils in each of the past seven years; and what is the amount of money calculated to be owed to employees in each of these years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Separate statistics for Strathclyde are not available. The information for Scotland is provided in the table:

Part 2 of Wages Act 1986: Wages inspectorate statistics Scotland

Year	Number of establishments underpaying	Amount of arrears assessed (£)
1985	849	238,422
1986	656	187,914
1987	323	86,872
1988	509	128,514
1989	547	166,578
1990	619	175,993
1991	737	184,001

PRIME MINISTER

Cayman Islands

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what are the statutory and administrative links between the Bank of England and the monetary authority for the Cayman Islands.

The Prime Minister: There are no statutory links. Administratively, the Cayman Islands has since 1962 invited one of the Bank of England's London-based staff to serve as a member of its board of commissioners of currency. The Cayman Islands inspectorate of banks and trust companies has also since 1978 engaged a succession of International Monetary Fund secondees who all have been employees of the Bank. Some training has also been given.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 390, what is the Cabinet Office's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

The Prime Minister: The current estimate for press and public relations expenditure by the Cabinet Office for 1992-93 is £366,000. In addition, it is expected that expenditure on publicity and public information associated with the citizens charter in 1992-93 will be some £700,000. Budgets for 1993-94 have not yet been finalised.

Unincorporated Bodies (Accounts)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward proposals to require unincorporated bodies to produce audited accounts; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Charities Act 1992 requires the accounts of unincorporated registered charities with an income of over £100,000 per annum to be audited. I have no plans for extending to unincorporated bodies generally the Companies Act requirement to prepare audited accounts.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he proposes to take to ensure that all bodies in the United Kingdom, with turnover over £5 million, produce full audited accounts.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to take such steps.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to ensure that all external funds received by unincorporated bodies in the United Kingdom from abroad are fully taxed; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Inland Revenue takes all reasonable steps to ensure that, where appropriate, funds received from abroad by unincorporated bodies are properly taxed.

Political Parties (Finance)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what steps he will take to investigate the origin of overseas funds paid to United Kingdom political parties; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to require all political parties to account for (a) all donations over £500 and (b) donations received from abroad;

(3) if he will introduce legislation to require political parties to disclose to the public the full extent of overseas donations received; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will introduce legislation to require all political parties in the United Kingdom to produce full audited accounts; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to take any such steps.

Disabled Employees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of employees in his Office are registered disabled.

The Prime Minister: None. For recruitment purposes, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. The percentage of registered disabled persons employed by the Cabinet Office is 1·1 per cent. The Cabinet Office is an equal opportunities employer and seeks to encourage the employment of people with disabilities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Land Mines

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact he has had with the United States Government regarding the United States moratorium on the export of land mines.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had no discussions with the United States Government on this issue.

Mr. Faisal Mahmood

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will arrange for instructions to be sent to the post in Karachi concerning the entry clearance application made by Mr. Faisal Mahmood, born on 23 August 1969, to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Mr. Faisal Mahmood was refused entry clearance on 31 December 1992 by the deputy high commission in Karachi as the entry clearance officer was not satisfied, as he is required to be under the immigration rules, that the primary purpose of the marriage was not to gain entry to the United Kingdom. Notice of the refusal was sent to Mr. Mahmood at the address given on his visa application form.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what, for the latest available year, was the cost to his Department of expenditure on support of the royal family in respect of (a) the marshal of the diplomatic service and (b) overseas visits at the request of Government Departments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to him on 1 February, Official Report, column 31. The cost to the Foreign Office was £67,000 in 1991-92.

The cost to the Foreign Office of royal visits overseas at the request of Government Departments in 1991-92 was £620,000.

Mr. Mordechai Vanunu

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what recent representations he has received regarding the case of Mordechai Vanunu: and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Israeli Government regarding the case of Mordechai Vanunu; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to receive some expressions of public concern. We have raised humanitarian aspects of this case privately with the Israelis, but we have no formal locus.

EC Social Protocol

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his statement of 15 February, Official Report, columns 27-28, why he considers it desirable for the social protocol to be incorporated into domestic law, other than for reasons of completeness and tidiness.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The social protocol is an annex to the treaty of Rome, and is therefore an integral part of that treaty. It has been the United Kingdom's consistent legislative practice to incorporate all amendments to the Community treaties into domestic law. This avoids unnecessary complexity in the implementation of our Community obligations.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement of 15 February, Official Report, columns 27-28, why he decided to seek legal advice from the Law Officer on the impact of amendment No. 27 to the European Communities (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The decision to consult the Law Officers on the impact of amendment No. 27 was taken in the light of discussion in the House of Commons and elsewhere which highlighted the importance of this question.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those parts of the treaty which can be deleted from the European Communities (Amendment) Bill without inhibiting the Government's (a) prerogative powers of ratification and (b) intention to ratify the treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The potential effect of amending the Bill in any way will be considered in the Committee stage, as is the standard practice.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library the evidence submitted by Professor Morgan of the University of Ontario to the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council inquiry into bronchitis and emphysema.

Mr. Scott: A number of organisations and individuals, including Professor Morgan, submitted written evidence to the council which informed its report, "Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema" [Cm. 2091]. The council, which is an independent body, often receives unpublished information which it treats in confidence. This is, therefore, a matter for the council and for the individual organisations and persons concerned.

War Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what communication he has made to the central advisory committee on war pensions in regard to arrears that may be payable to those awarded a war pension as a result of schizophrenia; if he will publish the text; and what response he has had from the committee.

Miss Widdecombe: A letter on the subject was sent to all members of the central advisory committee on war pensions on 25 November 1992; a copy of the letter has been placed in the Library. The committee undertook to publicise the matter.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reply is being sent by the war pensions directorate to the letter sent to it on 10 November 1992 by the legal director of MIND in regard to war pension entitlements; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The particular case referred to in the letter is being reviewed. A full reply to the legal director of MIND is being sent today.

DEFENCE

TA55

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the time taken between the start of construction of the TA55 facility at Los Alamos and its being declared operational.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the United States authorities.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 898, whether the bus being purchased from the United States for the United Kingdom Trident system will be the Mark IV, the Mark V bus, or a combination of the two.

Mr. Aitken: It will be the Mark IV bus.

Armed Forces (Sexual Offences)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will introduce the proposed legislation to repeal the relevant provisions of the Sexual Offences Act relating to the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The necessary amendment to section 1(5) of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 to decriminalise homosexual acts illegal under service law but legal in civilian law will be introduced as soon as the legislative programme allows.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have been discharged for inappropriate sexual conduct since 1 January 1991; and of those how many were (a) women, (b) men and (c) discharged for homosexual conduct.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1991, the latest year for which figures are available, 25 male personnel were dismissed from the services following conviction for sexual offences of a non-homosexual nature and eight for sexual offences of a homosexual nature. No female personnel were convicted of sexual offences in 1991. Between 1 January 1991 and 15 February 1993, 58 male personnel and 46 female personnel were administratively discharged for being homosexual or engaging in homosexual activities. Information is not held centrally in respect of personnel administratively discharged following sexual misconduct of any other nature and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Services Training

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current average cost per person of basic training for a member of (a) the Army, (b) the Navy and (c) the RAF.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The average cost per person of basic training for members of each of the armed services is as follows:

	Officers £	Other ranks £
Royal Navy	19,375	6,531
Army	25,696	5,080
Royal Air Force	14,190	1,898

The figures for the Navy and Army are for 1991-92, but the latest figures available for the RAF are for 1990-91. All figures exclude trainee and pay and allowances.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department of expenditure in support of the royal family in respect of (a) the royal yacht, (b) the Queen's flight, (c) royal flights in civil aircraft and (d) equerries, for the latest available year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Expenditure in support of the royal family borne by the Ministry of Defence in 1991-92 was as follows:

	£000
(a) Royal yacht	12,458
(b) Queen's flight	7,080
(c) Royal flights in civil aircraft	732
(d) Equerries	135

Royal Marines Deaths (Norway)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the naphtha-fuelled stove used by the two Royal Marines from 45 Commando who died while on a training exercise in southern Norway was service issue; if preliminary investigations have shown the stove to be faulty; and what plans there are to withdraw similar stoves from armed forces use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The naphtha-fuelled stove is service issue and its use is subject to the standing instructions for winter deployments by 3 Commando Brigade. The stove in question is now held by the Norwegian authorities as part of their investigations. There are no plans to withdraw similar stoves.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Department

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect the applicability of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 has had on (a) the time taken to implement the privatisation of, and (b) the amount of compensation to be paid to the private contractor awarded the contract for, the transport and supplies department of the prison service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The warehousing and distribution function of the supply and transport department was market-tested in 1991 and approval given to contract out the function from 1 April 1993. No contract has yet been signed. The implications of recent legal advice that the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations are applicable to the contracting out of this function are being considered.

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison inmates serving a life sentence were over the age of (a) 60, (b) 70 and (c) 80 years in prisons in (i) England and Wales, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Northern Ireland on 1 February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available information is for 30 June 1992 when there were 128 life sentence prisoners aged 60 or more in prison service establishments in England and Wales, of whom 16 were aged 70 or more and one of these was aged over 80. Prison inmates in Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, respectively.

Breach of the Peace

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the application of bail and appeal procedures to breach of the peace.

Mr. Jack: A person ordered to enter into a recognizance to keep the peace may appeal to the crown court under section 1 of the Magistrates' Court (Appeals from Binding-over Orders) Act 1956. Alternatively, he or she may appeal on a point of law by way of case-stated from either a magistrates court or the Crown court, to the High Court. If the person is in custody for refusing to be bound over, the magistrates court or the Crown court, as the case may be, may grant bail pending appeal under section 113 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 or section 81 of the Supreme Court Act, or in either case, the High Court may do so.

Probation Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were employed by the probation service in England and Wales, by grade in (a) 1981 and (b) 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Jack: The number of staff employed by probation committees in England and Wales, by grade and in post on 31 December 1981 and 30 September 1992, was as follows:

	31 December 1981	31 December 1991	30 September 1992
Chief probation officer	55	55	55
Deputy chief probation officer	181	24	23
Assistant chief probation officer	—	210	229
Senior probation officer	964	1,163	1,193
Main-grade probation officer	4,453	5,702	5,922
Ancillary	[1]990	1,864	1,851
Others	[1]5,897	5,314	5,396

[1] These figures include 990 part-time ancillary staff and 2,823 part-time other staff and so no direct comparison is possible with the 1991 and 1992 figures which are for full-time equivalent staff.

Lynfield Mount Hospital, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the West Yorkshire police as to (a) how many complaints were made to the police in each of the last five years, to date, concerning patients at Lynfield Mount hospital and (b) in how many cases (i) inquiries were made and (ii) charges were laid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. Operational matters are for the chief officer of the force concerned. I understand, however, that information is not held in a form which would identify such individuals.

Security Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make arrangements for hon. Members other than members of the Home Affairs Committee to meet the director of the Security Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is open to the director general of the Security Service to make such arrangements for meetings on an informal and private basis as she may wish. Hon. Members will however understand the Government's position on accountability of the service as set out in my letter of 13 November 1992 to the Chairman of the Home Affairs Committee.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct a study of the way in which parliamentary accountability exists for their security services in other EC countries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am aware that other countries have approached the issue of the accountability of their security services in a different way from that reflected for the United Kingdom in the Security Service Act 1989. However, given the different constitutional, legal and administrative systems in place in other countries I do not consider that a study of the kind proposed would be of any particular value.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the civil service grade of the director of the Security Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The post of director general of the Security Service is the equivalent of that of a grade 1A in the civil service.

Greenwich Police

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last received a communication from the chairman or secretary of the Greenwich police/community consultative group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The chairman and secretary of the Greenwich police/community consultative group wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend on 27 January. My right hon. and noble Friend Lord Ferrers will be replying shortly.

Prison Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from what date it is now his intention that new contracts for prison education should come into force; who will bear the cost of the delay in commencing the contracts for prison education for the period from 1 April until the actual commencement date; what provision will be made to the cost of compensation and redundancy for staff made redundant during that period; what advice he has given on the contractual position regarding prison education under the Protection of Employment (Transfer of Undertakings) Regulations 1981, during that period; if he will vary the arrangements for the tendering process for prison education that is now under way; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 18 February 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 11 February, Official Report, column 1098. The present suppliers were not prepared to extend the existing arrangements beyond 31 March in respect of 16 prison establishments. To secure the continuation of education in these prisons it was necessary to let contracts from 1 April. Where agreement to continue the existing arrangements was achieved, reimbursement of actual costs plus 5 per cent. in respect of administrative costs will be made by the Home Office as before until the new contracts are let and become effective. The Home Office considers that any costs resulting from redundancy remain, as previously, to be resolved between the employers and employees. As to the application of "TUPE" and the EEC Acquired Rights Directive 77/87, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Stretford on 8 December 1992, Official Report, column 555. Subject to the outcome of the judicial review, I do not propose any other variations to the arrangements for the tendering process already announced.

Bruche Police Training College

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department owes to Planned Maintenance Ltd. for maintenance work at the Bruche police training college, Warrington; for how long each invoice has been outstanding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 18 February 1993]: I will write to my hon. Friend.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Haddock

Mr. Austin Mitchell To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what efforts he is making to restrict the landing of North sea haddock to avoid early closure of the fishery;

(2) if he will ensure that the organisations responsible for the management of quotas act to reduce the present glut of haddock.

Mr. Curry: We are concerned that the early closure of the North sea haddock fishery should be avoided. With the increase in the total allowable catch for this fishery, we warned the industry, including product organisations, that it must act reasonably if it is to avoid disrupting the market and any repeat of the early closures which occurred in 1992. Discussions are taking place with the producer organisations about ways of improving quotas management and we shall be monitoring the situation very closely.

It is not for the Government to arrange the day-to-day catches of the industry. That is precisely what the producer organisations ought to be doing. If they are not able to do so, they should be addressing their management weaknesses and seeking effective and self-interested discipline for their members.

MV Braer

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring activity is being undertaken in United Kingdom coastal waters following on from the grounding of the MV Braer on 5 January; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 February 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

On the basis of sampling already undertaken in the sea around Shetland, there is no requirement for monitoring United Kingdom waters outside Shetland.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Relocation

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what European regulations govern industries relocating within the European Community in receipt of European grants; and what domestic regulations govern such industries in respect of United Kingdom national grants.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no European Community or domestic regulations governing industries relocating within the Community, whether or not they are in receipt of Community or national funds. Relocation is a commercial decision for the company involved. The European Commission does, however, enforce maximum levels of grant available in different regions of the Community.

There are restrictions on the movement of firms which have received assistance in the United Kingdom. The contractual terms and conditions of regional selective assistance, for example, allow grant to be clawed back from firms which close down a project or reduce the scale of investment and/or jobs involved, within a stated period. This varies, but is normally within three years of completion of payment grant.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reason his Department's annual report on plutonium production and stockpile figures gives data only up to31 March 1992; and what steps he is taking to publish more up-to-date figures in his next report.

Mr. Eggar: The annual plutonium figures give data on a financial year basis. Figures in respect of 1992-93 will be published as soon as they have been compiled, and I have asked my officials to see if the information can be put together more quickly.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much of the plutonium listed in section 2 (d) (ii) and (iii) in his press notice P/93/51 of 4 February, the annual production and stockpile figures, has been notified for withdrawal from safeguards under article 14 Provisions of the 1978 Tripartite Safeguards treaty between the United Kingdom, Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Small Loans Guarantee Scheme

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures the banks are taking to support the Government's small loans guarantee scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The main high street banks fully support the changes to the small loans guarantee scheme, already announced to enhance its cost-effectiveness and are ensuring that appropriate information, training and systems are in place for its start on 1 April 1993.

Clean Energy Strategy

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the programme and future strategy for the United Kingdom clean energy fuel cell advisory group; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Eggar: I expect to publish a strategy for my Department's advanced fuel cell research and development programme, prepared in consultation with the fuel cell advisory panel, in the summer.

Owners Abroad (Takeover)

Sir George Gardiner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the bid for Owners Abroad by Airtours.

Mr. Heseltine: I have received a number of representations concerning this bid. These have been seen by the Director General of Fair Trading so that he can take them into account in his advice to me.

Colliery Reserves

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to require British Coal to provide information about colliery reserves to the relevant trade unions.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 February 1993]: I have no plans to do so.

Regional Development Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 143, regarding the regional development fund, if he will give the figures for each financial year from 1984-85 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1984 prices.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 16 February 1993]: Since the European Community's financial years are calendar years, it is not possible to give a precise figure.

Industrial Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his work on methods of promoting research in industry, pending the next round of inward investment.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The Government seek to encourage companies to invest more in research and development by creating the right climate, for example, by reducing the tax burden on business. The main rate of corporation tax, at 33 per cent., is now the lowest in any G7 or EC country. In addition, the Government provide over £200 million per annum to United Kingdom companies through a variety of schemes designed to stimulate expenditure on research and development, for example, the LINK and advanced technology programmes and, specifically to help smaller companies, SMART and SPUR.

Companies investing in the United Kingdom are fully eligible to participate in these schemes, providing subsequent exploitation benefits the United Kingdom.

Telephone Metering

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce legislation to regulate telephone metering in England and Wales.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 17 February 1993]: My Department has lead reponsibility for telecommunications matters. The licences of all public telecommunications operators in the United Kingdom require the operators to have their telephone meters independently approved under section 24 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 and to ensure that their bills to customers are accurate. The Director General of Telecommunications has powers to independently verify that operators are complying with these requirements, and if necessary, to take enforcement action against an operator who is not in compliance with the requirements.

Offshore Oil

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many blocks were initially nominated by oil companies for offer under the 14th round of offshore licensing; and how many of these blocks the Government finally decided should not be issued after consultation with the statutory and non-statutory bodies.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 February 1993]: Some 700 blocks were nominated for inclusion in the round; a total of 484 were offered. Of the remaining 200 or so the majority were not offered as a result of consultation, although in some cases the nomination was not maintained.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Printed Matter (Subsidy)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the range of Government subsidies, including postal, which currently apply to newspapers, books and magazines in each EC member state.

Mr. Brooke: The British publishing industry receives no direct subsidies from Government. Value added tax is, however, zero rated on the income from sales of newspapers, books and periodicals. In addition, the Post Office operates a long-standing concession under which registered newspapers are given first-class service at second-class postage rates; and special facilities are available to those posting large numbers of newspapers and magazines under the Post Office's Postream service. Information relating to the position in other EC member states could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Art Collections

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what additional measures he is considering to increase public access to the royal art collection.

Mr. Brooke: I am responsible for public access to the historic royal palaces, namely the Banqueting house Whitehall, Hampton Court palace, Kensington palace, Kew palace and the Tower of London, where items from the royal collection are on display. These palaces, which contain about a third of the paintings in the royal collection, receive more than 2 million visitors per year. Important schemes to improve and increase the display of the collection in those palaces, such as the opening of the state apartments at Hampton Court palace, have recently been completed and further schemes are in hand. In addition, Osborne house, for which I am responsible and which receives some 185,000 visitors per year, also contains items from the royal collection.

Public access to items from the royal collection displayed in the occupied royal palaces, namely, Windsor castle, Buckingham palace, St. James's palace and elsewhere, is a matter for the royal household.

English Heritage

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received from the Council for British Archaeology in January relating to his plans for the future of English Heritage; what reply he has sent; if he will publish the representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that the only representations by the Council for British Archaeology in January about English Heritage's forward strategy were, in fact, made to the National Heritage Select Committee. Representations to my Department by the council were made in November last year and it would be for the council to decide whether to publish its comments and my reply.

I have absorbed the anxieties expressed by a number of organisations and individuals about the proposals in the strategy and hope that the responses from my Department and English Heritage have helped to reassure them that the proposals will ensure greater, not lesser, protection for the built heritage. The benefits of the strategy, in terms of a clearer focusing of priorities, are already apparent. Despite constraints on funding, English Heritage expects to be able to spend £6 million more next year on restoration of properties in its care and on grants to owners of historic buildings.

WALES

Deprived Areas

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the population of each local authority area in Wales live in officially recognised deprived wards; and if he will publish the equivalent figures for each year since 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The list of wards recognised as deprived for urban programme purposes was published in Welsh Office circular No. 25/91. The latest population figures for these wards were published in the census 1991. Ward population figures are not available for 1989, 1990 and 1992. Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on behalf of cancer sufferers in Gwynedd with regard to the possibility of networking the radiotherapy treatment available at Clatterbridge, to Ysbyty Gwynedd and to Ysbyty Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Representations have been received from the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) and from a number of clinicians and representative organisations in Gwynedd about a networked radiotherapy treatment arrangement between the Clatterbridge Centre for Oncology NHS trust and Ysbyty Gwynedd and Ysbyty Clwyd. These are being considered in connection with proposals to improve cancer treatment services in north Wales.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provisions he plans to make to ensure that cancer patients in Gwynedd can have access to cancer screening and radiotherapy treatment in Bangor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend announced in March last year that patients would best be served by establishing a dedicated cancer treatment centre with radiotherapy facilities in north Wales. An investment appraisal of location, need, content, cost and management arrangements was commissioned. My right hon. Friend is currently considering that report and hopes to make an announcement in the near future.

Playing Fields

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many designated playing fields have been lost to development in each local authority area in Wales during each of the last three years.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally. I will be considering with the Sports Council for Wales whether the register of playing fields presently being compiled in England should be extended to Wales.

M4 Link

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the companies which tendered for the M4 link in Wales to the second Severn crossing.

Mr. David Hunt: The firms invited to tender for the M4 second Severn crossing approach roads project were, in alphabetical order:

1. Christiani and Neilsen/Alfred McAlpine Construction Joint Venture
2. Costain Building and Civil Engineering Ltd.
3. Laing GTM
4. Norwest Holst Civil Engineering Limited
5. E. Nuttall Limited
6. Trafalgar House.

Wind Power

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement regarding applications for wind turbine power stations in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Applications for planning permission for wind turbines should be considered in the light of the planning policy guidance note on "Renewable Energy" which was published on 3 February by the Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment.

Social Housing

Mr. Alex Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council houses have been renovated in Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is available only from 1984 onwards. This is given in the following table:

Local Authority Dwellings Renovated

	Number
1984	12,690
1985	14,608
1986	22,875
1987	24,503
1988	30,804
1989	32,812
1990	24,605
1991	25,707

Source: Welsh Office local authority returns.

Mr. Alex Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homes were in social use in Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information has been published in table 1.3 of Welsh Housing Statistics No. 12, 1992, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Cancer

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will supply details of the incidence by sex and crude age-specific rate by sex of (a) cancer of the bone, (b) leukaemia, (c) maligant neoplasm of the female breast and (d) malignant neoplasm of the stomach in (i) Wales in total and (ii) each district health authority area in each year since 1986;

(2) if he will supply details of the incidence according to sex and five-year age category of cancer of the bone for (a) Wales in total and (b) each district health authority area for each year since 1971.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the incidence and incidence rate for specific cancers is presented in the Welsh Office publications "Cancer Registration in Wales, 1974-84" and "Cancer Registration in Wales, 1984-86". Copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

1974 is the earliest year for which reliable data are available. Data relating to years up to 1988 will be published later this year.

As the number of specific cancers in a given district health authority, age group and year can be very small, annual incidence rates at the level requested presented in isolation would be very difficult to interpret and could be misleading. Consequently the published figures cover incidence rates by health authority and age-specific rates for Wales over a three-year or five-year period.

Hospital Staff

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospital nurses and hospital doctors there were in each county and in total in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on hospital medical staff is given in the following table:

Information on nursing staff is available only on the total staff in post for all nursing and midwifery staff. Breakdowns of these staff into occupation category are not considered reliable. The available information is given in the following table.

Nursing and Midwifery Staff in Post as at 30 September (whole-time equivalents)

[2] Excludes staff who are employed by WHCSA as they are not hospital nurses.

[3] Staff working for the Blood Transfusion Service were transferred to the Common Services Authority with effect from 1 April 1991.

[4] The implementation of the Project 2000 nursing education reforms in 1992 has led to the reclassification of some student nurses as students. Precise estimates of this effect are not readily available centrally but overall in 1992 about 1,000 nurses have been reclassified. Those in the student intake prior to 30 September 1992 have been excluded from the 1992 count. Due to the use of local payscales the figures for 1992 may slightly underestimate the true position as these staff can not be placed in a particular staff group. This particularly applies to Pembrokeshire NHS Trust who have, therefore, supplied the figure for 1992.

Drugs Projects

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the continuation of the Drugaid Cardiff and the Vale drugs project after 31 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have received one representation, direct from Drugaid, regarding the continuation of its Cardiff and Vale project after 31 July 1993. Continued funding beyond 31 July 1993 is, in the first place, a matter for South Glamorgan county social services department and South Glamorgan health authority.

Rail Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from Brian Scott, manager of great western division of InterCity, in relation to the viability of his track and service purchase-provider split proposals.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons he interviewed for the post of chairman of the Welsh Development Agency, prior to the placing of the job advertisement on 27 January; and how many applications he has received so far.

Mr. David Hunt: As yet I have not interviewed any applicants; 77 applications have been received.

Cardiff De-watering Study

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received the interim report of the Cardiff pilot dewatering study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has received the report and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

These preliminary results are encouraging and indicate that a system of dewatering wells could be a feasible method of controlling groundwater levels after the Cardiff Bay barrage is built.

A final report is expected in the next few weeks. My right hon. Friend will want to give that report careful consideration before deciding whether to ask Cardiff Bay development corporation to proceed with a full dewatering system.

ENVIRONMENT

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Howard: This information is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Statutory Instruments

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament by his Department in each of the years 1980 to 1992.

Mr. Howard: The number of statutory instruments laid before Parliament by my Department in each of the years 1980 to 1992 was as follows:

	Number
1980	93
1981	106
1982	66
1983	85
1984	68
1985	81
1986	98
1987	86
1988	102
1989	160
1990	159
1991	149
1992	181

London Boroughs (Audited Accounts)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many London boroughs have gone for more than six years without producing unqualified and completed audited accounts; and if he will list them.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on whether accounts have been qualified is not held centrally by the Audit Commission for years prior to 1989-90. For each of the years 1989-90 to 1991-92 the following London boroughs have either not produced their accounts, have had no audit opinion on their accounts or have had their accounts qualified:

Brent
Camden
Greenwich
Hackney
Hammersmith and Fulham
Haringey
Hillingdon
Islington
Lambeth
Lewisham
Newham
Richmond upon Thames
Southwark
Tower Hamlets
Westminster

Audits are still in progress in some cases.

Packaging Council

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inquiries have been received by the Packaging Council from the general public; and if the Council will issue a report.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that the Packaging Standards Council, formerly the Packaging Council, has received 12 inquiries about the social, functional and environmental aspects of packaging in its first six months, as well as numerous requests for information. The council intends to publish its first report later this month.

The Hermitage, Swindon

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his decision to preserve the Hermitage in Swindon.

Mr. Baldry: On 9 October 1992 Thamesdown borough council applied to my right hon. and learned Friend for consent to demolish the Hermitage, an unlisted building in the Swindon old town conservation area. The borough council was advised on 18 January 1993 that my right hon. and learned Friend was minded to refuse consent since he did not consider that, on the evidence available, demolition would either preserve or enhance the conservation area. However, the borough council was offered the opportunity of being heard at a public local inquiry; it has still to respond formally to this offer.

Management Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish results from his Department's management information system for Ministers.

Mr. Howard: I will be taking decisions on my Department's priorities and the disposition of its resources next month and expect to publish in late May or early June the MINIS 14 returns which will reflect those decisions.

Pollution Control

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of floating incinerators moored off United Kingdom shores or in ports and rivers, what is the present position regarding pollution control; what is the present legal requirement to obtain planning permission; what are the opportunities for the community to have their views taken into account in respect of a proposed development; what proposals he has to change the law on planning permission and pollution control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Incineration of waste material at sea is controlled internationally by the Oslo convention, to which the United Kingdom is a party. In 1987 a North sea ministerial conference agreed that all marine incineration should be phased out by 31 December 1994, and in March 1990 the Government announced that no more United Kingdom waste would be licensed for marine incineration after the end of that year.

The pollution controls established under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 extend to prescribed processes which might take place on water, including United Kingdom territorial waters, and the release of prescribed substances into such waters. The provision of permanent moorings for a vessel generally involves a material change of use of land, for which planning permission is required.

Advertisement and notification of applications is required under both the planning and pollution control systems to give local people and organisations an opportunity to express their views; and relevant views must be taken into account in the determination of a planning application or an application for authorisation under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

I am satisfied that these arrangements are adequate to ensure appropriate regulation of any floating incinerator moored off United Kingdom shores or in ports and rivers.

Electricity Companies

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Director General of Electricity Supply since November 1992 on the inclusion of energy efficiency investment as part of the normal business costs of regional electricity companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Amendments to the price controls are a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply. The director general's announcement in November that he would take energy efficiency into account in a similar way to other business costs when reviewing the price control is to be welcomed.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Energy Saving Trust to commence its work.

Mr. Maclean: The Energy Saving Trust is an independent body and its operation is a matter for its chairman and board of directors. I understand that the chairman will be writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects OFGAS to approve the initial pilot schemes which are to be supported by the Government's Energy Saving Trust; what they will be; by whom they will be operated; and when they will be launched.

Mr. Maclean: This is a matter between British Gas, which has proposed three pilot schemes designed to encourage the efficient use of gas, and OFGAS, which has been asked to authorise the expenditure.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make a financial contribution towards the work of the new Energy Saving Trust; and what this will cover.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has already made a considerable contribution in kind, in the form of staff effort and time, towards the establishment of the trust. It has also provided the trust with a member of staff on secondment for two years.

The Energy Efficiency Office is also assisting the trust with the development and funding of a proposed pilot scheme of local information centres which will provide domestic and small business consumers with independent advice on energy efficiency. Planned expenditure on this scheme by the EEO is £1·8 million in 1993-94 and £2 million in each of 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish a report prepared by the Building Research Establishment concerning the effectiveness of the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Maclean: The building research energy conservation support unit (BRECSU) has carried out an interim evaluation of the home energy efficiency scheme (HEES) on behalf of the Energy Efficiency Office. The data for that evaluation have come principally from interview surveys and energy audits. BRECSU is currently refining the data using fuel bill information. I hope to make the final report available to interested parties and to place copies in the Library of the House within the next three months.

Heathrow Airport (Fifth Terminal)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call in the planning application for a fifth terminal at Heathrow airport submitted by BAA plc on 17 February.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish a management statement for the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board.

Mr. Maclean: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment has today issued a management statement for the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board.

Flats Over Shops

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will receive grant aid under the flats over shops initiative for 1993-94; and at what levels.

Sir George Young: I have placed in the Library a list of 132 local authorities in England to receive flats over shops allocations totalling £10 million for 1993-94.

Hire Car Licences

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many cases local authority decisions not to issue a hackney carriage or private hire vehicle driver's licence have been (a) overturned by magistrates courts and (b) the subject of further appeal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dangerous Vessels

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many ships have been apprehended by harbour masters for violations in entering and leaving port under the Dangerous Vessels (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 in each of the past five years.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Assessment Centres

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to establish assessment centres for business and industrial training in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Crozier to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 18 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans we have to establish assessment centres for business and industrial training in Northern Ireland.

The establishment of Assessment Centres is a matter for employers to work out with Awarding Bodies (which are responsible for approving arrangements for the assessment of national vocational qualifications (NVQs).

Some employer bodies have well advanced plans for the development of NVQs in their sectors including the provision of Assessment Centres. The Training and Employment Agency (Northern Ireland) (T&EA) takes a close interest in such developments, but is not involved in the running of the Centres.

Quangos

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies for which his Department is responsible which have the power to compel individuals, firms, companies or other institutions to carry out their instructions at the expense of the individuals, firms, companies or other institutions, and also to charge fees for the cost to the non-departmental public bodies of assessing the work which needed to be done.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The non-departmental bodies in Northern Ireland which fall into this category are:

The area health and social services boards
The Northern Ireland Housing Executive
The Fire Authority for Northern Ireland

TRANSPORT

Oil Transhipment

Mr. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals for permission to be necessary for the transhipment of oil.

Mr. Norris: My Department is consulting on draft regulations under section 35 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 covering the transfer of oil between ships in United Kingdom waters.

A27

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what authority he has placed contracts for ground investigation works on the Worthing to Lancing section of the A27, including tunnels under Salvington and Lancing Ring, before a public inquiry has recommended that route; what was the advertised figure for the cost of the works and what is his current estimate; what the maximum loss to public funds is estimated to be if a different route is eventually chosen and on what vote this would fall; and what procedures were followed for the authorisation of the contracts and the advertising.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Authority to undertake surveys of land in connection with a highway authority's functions is given by section 289 of the Highways Act 1980. The award of a ground investigation contract for the A27 Worthing-Lancing scheme to Exploration Associates Ltd. was announced on 24 July 1991. The 20-week contract was let in accordance with my Department's normal procedures to provide information on soil conditions required for design and assessment work prior to the publication of draft orders. The investigation included the collection of information on the blue and red routes for comparison with the preferred route. The value of the accepted tender was £149,992. The final outturn cost is not yet known. The cost of the contract is being met from the roads vote.

TransPennine Routes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 866, if the consultants responsible for the TransPennine study strategy report were made aware, at the time they were commissioned, that the Government were considering extending the M65 westwards from Blackburn to the M6.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of the TransPennine study strategy report.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The whole study, including roadside interviews and data collection, cost about £900,000.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many transport consultancy organisations tendered for the TransPennine study strategy commissioned by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Four.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the TransPennine study strategy report was commissioned; when it was due to report; when it reported; and if he will make a statement on the delay in publication.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 3 July 1992 at column 726. The study was commissioned in January 1990 and expected to be completed in spring 1991. The scope of the work was extended and the study completed in spring 1992. The strategy report was published in September 1992.

The study was wide ranging and addressed complex issues. Our consideration of the consultants' findings took longer than expected.

A1

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 670-71, what is his estimate of the extra length of journey it would take if the proposed route of the new A1 went to the east of Knottingley.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: About three quarters of a mile.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 670-71, what is the estimated annual cost of the new A1 bypassing Knottingley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The present prediction of the annual cost in operational terms of the proposed A1 motorway between Redhouse and Hook Moor is £80 million. The similar cost of a route to the east of Knottingley would be £100 million.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the public inquiry to take place on the new A1 proposals for Ferrybridge in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A public inquiry would be held following the publication of draft orders. The timing of an inquiry depends upon the weight and nature of objections to the orders, but typically would be in two to three years from now.

Road Haulage

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Transport Act 1968 to allow licensing authorities to accept a wide range of representations on behalf of a community's residents regarding any plans by road hauliers for new or expanded operations within that community.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: County and district councils, which are locally elected representative bodies, have a statutory right of objection to a licensing authority in respect of applications for, or major variations to, goods vehicle operator licences. In addition, owners or occupiers of property in the vicinity of an operating centre involved in such an application have a right of representation to the licensing authority on the grounds of adverse environmental effect on their property.

Reviews of the goods vehicle operator licensing provisions in 1986 and 1989 concluded that, in addition, parish/community councils should have a right of representation, on general environmental grounds, but that the provisions otherwise strike a fair balance between the interests of people affected by operating centres and those of the road haulage industry. I am satisfied that this remains the case.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what, for the latest available year, was the cost to his Department of expenditure in support of the royal family in respect of (a) official travel by train including maintenance of the royal train and (b) the royal train renewal programme.

Mr. Freeman: In 1991-92 expenditure on (a) was £2·440 million and on (b) £0·126 million.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Alcohol Imports

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his latest estimate of the levels of receipts from duty on beer lost to the Exchequer arising from duty-paid imports of beer from elsewhere in the single market;

(2) what is his latest estimate of the level of duty-paid imports of beer from elsewhere in the EC as a percentage of the take-home beer market.

Sir John Cope: The revenue loss arising from personal importations of duty-paid beer is difficult to estimate as it depends upon the quantity of beer that would otherwise have been purchased in the United Kingdom. The Brewers Society's latest statistics suggest that since 1 January 1993 personal imports of duty-paid beer account for 9·4 per cent. of the take-home trade compared with 8·4 per cent. a year ago. Take home sales represent one fifth of the United Kingdom beer market. Customs are studying the figures in consultation with the Brewers Society.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of VAT is levied on (a) newspapers, (b) paid-for magazines, (c) free magazines and (d) books in each EC member state.

Sir John Cope: The information available for each EC member state for VAT levied on the sales of newspapers, paid-for magazines and books is set out in the tables. I am not aware of any circumstances under which VAT is levied on free magazines in these countries, but sale of advertising space would normally be taxable.

[1] A rate of 12 per cent. has been introduced in Italy. We do not currently have any information about its coverage, and so the rate shown is that applied before its introduction.

[2] Portugal applies a higher rate of books of an obscene or pornographic nature.

Source: VAT in Europe (International Bureau of Fiscal Documentation) according to information available as at 1 January 1993.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the VAT collected on advertisements in (a) newspapers, (b) paid-for magazines and (c) free magazines.

Sir John Cope: Detail about the receipts from VAT on specific items of expenditure is not collected on VAT returns. An estimate of the total revenue yield from advertisements in newspapers, journals and periodicals was made in 1985 when the zero-rating was withdrawn. The equivalent figure now is about £100 million.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of imposing VAT on bus fares.

Sir John Cope: Table D1 of the statistical supplement to the 1992 autumn statement shows the estimated cost of zero-rating domestic passenger transport in 1992-93 is £1,100 million. This estimate makes no allowance for the behavioural response to applying the standard rate of VAT to this category, so the actual yield would probably be less. Bus fares account for around 44 per cent. of the total.

Civil Servants

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many central London-based administrative civil servants of assistant principal rank and above have been made redundant, or warned of redundancy, in the past 18 months.

Mr. Portillo: During the period 1 April 1991 to 1 October 1992, 62 central London-based administrative civil servants of administration trainee (AT) grade and above were made redundant. The AT grade is equivalent to assistant principal which ceased to exist in 1971.

These figures relate to the home civil service and are the latest available. Figures covering the period 1 July 1992 to 1 October 1992 are provisional.

Central London has been defined as covering the inner London weighting area, that is, within a five-mile radius of Charing Cross.

No records are available of numbers warned for redundancy.

Firearms

Mr. James Hill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many anti-smuggling checks have been made to prevent firearms and other weapons from being illegally imported from EC member states through British ports and airports since 1 January.

Sir John Cope: Customs perform a range of checks at United Kingdom ports and airports to enforce all prohibitions and restrictions. Customs records to not provide a separate account of the number of checks specifically targeted on firearms and other weapons.

Manufacturing Output

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the level of (a) industrial production and (b) manufacturing output in (i) October, (ii) November and (iii) December 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Indices of industrial production and manufacturing output may be found on the CSO databank which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library. Information is currently available for months up to December 1992.

Intrastat Classification

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the practice of Customs and Excise governing the distribution of the Intrastat classification nomenclature; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: A free copy of the Intrastat classification nomenclature has been distributed to traders whose trade during 1991-92 exceeded the Intrastat threshold and who are therefore required to submit monthly supplementary statistical declarations. It assists them in identifying the codes required to complete the statistical declarations accurately.

Additional copies may be obtained at a charge of £7 each, inclusive of delivery.

To date, approximately 33,000 free copies have been issued, and orders received for a further 3,700. The Customs and Excise single market liaison officers also answer classification queries.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of distributing the Intrastat classification nomenclature for the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: This is the first year of distribution of the Intrastat classification nomenclature and the total printing and distribution cost so far is approximately £225,000.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to send only the relevant parts of the Intrastat classification nomenclature to appropriate firms; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: No. In order to supply only the relevant parts of the Intrastat classification nomenclature it would have been necessary to ascertain, for each of the 33,000 traders involved, which parts of it would cover their trading activities. This could have been achieved only by asking traders to supply the necessary information. This would have created an unnecessary burden on traders. This course was therefore rejected.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the release of statistics by the Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Lamont: When the Central Statistical Office (CSO) was launched as an agency a little over a year ago I made clear the Government's commitment to the arrangements adopted to ensure the integrity and validity of United Kingdom official statistics and to sustain public confidence in them. I have now agreed some improved practices for the release of CSO statistics which demonstrates that commitment.

The improved practices, and their effect, are as follows:

(i) all statistics will be published as early as possible, with many being released much more quickly than currently—improving decision-making and enhancing openness;

(ii) data will be available to all users at the same time, but Ministers, and where appropriate the Governor of the Bank of England, and some officials (on a strict need-to-know basis) will receive copies of key statistical releases 1½ days in advance—promoting transparency; and

(iii) the CSO will be entirely responsible for the contents of its press releases, subject to advance consultation with me on changes in format—demonstrating the integrity of the statistics.

The CSO is publishing today a document setting out its release practices in detail, and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

These changes emphasise my determination to promote openness and transparency in the Government's economic decision making, enhance the reputation of Government statistics, and promote public confidence in their integrity.

HEALTH

Elderly People (Home Care)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will establish provisions for home help care for discharged elderly patients that include continuing daily visits to people known to be at risk, irrespective of charging policies;

(2) if she will establish a review and evaluation policy for home help organisers or care managers responsible for those elderly discharged from hospital who have had their home help discontinued or severely reduced;

(3) if she will lay down guidelines for assessment, when an eldery person is to be discharged into the care of another elderly person, of the health and social care needs of the household, couple or group, in addition to that of the patient;

(4) if she will lay down guidelines on basic minimal standards of service for elderly patients discharged into community care.

(5) if she will conduct regular review assessments to evaluate the effectiveness of the services being received by elderly patients who have been discharged into community care.

Mr. Yeo: Provision of home care services to elderly people discharged from hospital is the responsibility of local authorities. They are best placed to determine individual needs and how they can best be met. Detailed guidance has been issued to authorities about the assessment process, including the need for periodic reviews of needs. The way in which local authorities carry out their responsibilities is monitored by the social services inspectorate, which also advises authorities on good practice. Examples of relevant good practice material include:

NHS Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 December, Official Report, columns 421-22, regarding NHS staff if she will provide comparable figures for 30 September 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is currently being processed, and will be available later this year.

Drug Prescribing

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations she had with the Royal College of General Practitioners prior to her announcement of the extension of the limited list to further therapeutic categories.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such consultations took place as the changes do not affect the basic structure of the selected list scheme which has been in operation since 1985.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish her proposals regarding the limited cost of drugs to be used in the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: The timing of the publication of proposals for removing particular drugs in the new categories from national health service prescription will depend on when we receive advice from the advisory committee on NHS drugs.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what savings to the NHS medicines bill were achieved in each of the therapeutic categories covered by the limited list of 1985 (a) in the first year and (b) in each year since 1985;

(2) what savings in the NHS medicines bill she expects to achieve by the extension of the limited list to further therapeutic categories in the years 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is estimated that the selected list scheme saved £75 million on the drugs bill in 1985-86. The estimated savings in each of the seven therapeutic groups were:

	£ million
Coughs and cold remedies	22
Analgesics for mild to moderate pain	19
Indigestion remedies	8

	£ million
Vitamins	7·5
Laxatives	2
Tonics	1
Benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers	15·5

It is not possible to make meaningful estimates for subsequent years, but we have every reason to believe that the scheme has resulted in continuing downward pressure on the drugs bill. We cannot predict what savings will be made as a result of the recently announced extension to the scheme. This will depend on the recommendations of the independent advisory committee on national health service drugs.

Cancer

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish updated cancer incidence statistics; what assessment she has made of the causes of delays in publication; and what proposals she has to improve the speed of publication.

Mr. Sackville: The national cancer registration scheme was reviewed recently by a working group of the registrar general's medical advisory committee. The 17 recommendations in its report[1] covered funding, improvements to notification, managerial control, access, confidentiality, and training. All the recommendations have been acted upon. The Department has established a steering committee, chaired by the deputy chief medical officer, to oversee the system. The Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) is currently redeveloping its computer system, as are several of the regional cancer registries, with the aim of improving the timeliness—without sacrificing the high ascertainment and quality—of the information. Following wide consultation, a minimum data set for cancer registration should be introduced by 1 July 1993 at the latest; the supply of the information to the regional cancer registries and onwards to OPCS will be mandatory. The annual reference volume for 1987, which will be published in mid-March, will contain a revised and expanded commentary on the results; it will also include estimates of cancer registrations for 1988 to 1991 inclusive.

"Day In—day Out"

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration her Department has given to the recommendations on respite care of the Royal College of Nursing and the Spastics Society in the report entitled "Day In—Day Out", a copy of which has been sent to her; what action she will be taking in response to the recommendations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Improved respite care services and support for carers are key objectives of our community care reforms. The reforms will give authorities increased incentives to provide respite care, particularly as the residential allowance will be payable to people in respite as well as long-term care. Our preparations have stressed improved health and social services collaboration which lie at the heart of many of the recommendations in the report.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations she has received about a proposal to establish a secure unit at Lynfield Mount hospital in Bradford; in what circumstances she would be asked to decide whether the unit be established; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what information has been received from Bradford community health trust about a proposal to establish a secure unit at Lynfield Mount hospital in Bradford; who would fund such a unit; and what is the estimated cost; and what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the consultative document issued by the trust and Bradford health authority concerning this unit with respect to enabling the public to form a judgment.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has provisionally approved a proposal submitted by the Yorkshire regional health authority to establish a 22-place secure ward at Lynfield Mount hospital. The estimated capital cost of £329,000 has been made available to the trust as part of its external finance limit. Any new building will require planning permission from the local authority and the application would be available for public scrutiny under the planning procedures. The hon. Member may wish to raise any questions about the consultative document in the first instance with Bradford health authority.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what powers are available to refer persons suffering from mental illness to secure accommodation; and how far these powers vary according to whether the person is (a) a voluntary patient and (b) a sectioned patient;

(2) if she will list the secure units located in Yorkshire to which people suffering from mental illness are referred; who has powers to refer persons to such units; which such persons or bodies have the power to refer in cases where the medical management of a secure unit may believe such referral is medically inappropriate; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Yorkshire regional health authority has available within its boundary 44 medium secure places at Newton Lodge, Wakefield; 28 interim medium secure places at De La Pole hospital, Hull; 16 interim medium secure places at High Royds hospital, Ilkley, and 14 places in a locked facility at Storthes Hall, Huddersfield.

Patients may be referred to such units from a variety of sources. Patients in medium secure units will usually be detained under the Mental Health Act 1983, although it is possible for a unit to accept a patient who is not detained.

Section 2 of the Mental Health Act 1983 allows a person to be detained for up to 28 days for assessment. Section 3 of the Act provides for detention for treatment for a mental disorder. The application for admission for assessment or treatment under these sections must be made either by an approved social worker or the nearest relative and supported by the written recommendation of two registered medical practitioners.

A court may make a hospital order under section 37 of the Act and may impose restrictions on discharge under section 41. Courts may also remand a suspected offender to hospital for assessment (section 35) or medical treatment (section 36), or make an interim hospital order (section 38) so that a person's response to treatment can be assessed before the court makes a final decision. In all these cases, the court's decision would be based on the recommendation of two medical practitioners, one of whom must be approved by the Secretary of State under section 12 of the Act.

If a person is serving a sentence of imprisonment and is considered to need treatment in hospital, the Home Secretary may, on the recommendation of two medical practitioners, direct transfer to hospital under section 47 of the Act. Section 48 provides similarly for the transfer of remand and certain other prisoners. The Home Secretary may also, if he thinks fit, direct that a transferred prisoner be subject to restrictions on discharge under section 49 of the Act.

"Sectioned" is a colloquial term for patients who are compulsorily admitted to hospital under the Act. Voluntary patients, unlike those who are detained, are free to leave hospital as they choose.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for health how much Bradford health authority has spent in each of the past five years, to date, in referring patients to secure units (a) within Yorkshire and (b) in other places; and what difficulty the authority has experienced in finding suitable places.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals have been received from Bradford health authority for the establishment of a secure unit at Westwood hospital in Bradford.

Mr. Yeo: I am aware of proposals to close Westwood hospital and transfer the majority of its residents to places in the community. I understand that the proposals include the provision of a newly converted building on the hospital site for the few remaining residents. I am not aware of any proposals to establish a secure unit on the site.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have been held with Yorkshire regional health authority about the number of secure unit places for those suffering from mental illness in Yorkshire.

Mr. Yeo: The Department has held periodic discussions with Yorkshire regional health authority on its future plans for psychiatric provision in the region and related issues. In addition, all regions were required last year to produce an assessment of need for secure services for their populations. A further assessment of needs is being conducted this year.

Adoption

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers she has to prevent a British child from being taken out of the United Kingdom by a local authority social services department for adoption by a family in Canada.

Mr. Yeo: Depending on the circumstances, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has power to issue directions under section 7A of the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970 in respect of local authority adoption functions. This power would be used only exceptionally and not normally in respect of an individual case. It is not our function to review local authority practice in relation to individual cases nor to act as an appellate body. However, if my hon. Friend has concerns about a particular case he may wish to contact me directly with the details.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued regarding assessments for community care needs being undertaken by social workers employed by voluntary organisations (a) where the organisation concerned is a direct provider of care and (b) where the organisation concerned is not a direct provider of care; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The guidance we have issued has made clear that voluntary organisations, whether direct care providers or not, may have a role in providing expert advice in assessments. It may also be appropriate in some cases for social services authorities to make arrangements with such organisations to carry out assessments of people with specialist needs on their behalf. In all cases overall responsibility for decisions about service provision remains with the social services authority.

In-patient Admissions

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of in-patient admissions to hospitals in each of the Thames region health authorities in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is given in the table.

SCOTLAND

Ambulance Service

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes there have been to plans by the Scottish ambulance service to expand and develop the Haddington ambulance station; and how the numbers of vehicles and staff deployed at Haddington have changed.

Mr. Stewart: The service provided from the Haddington station was expanded over the last two years to take account of the change at Roodlands hospital and there are no plans to further develop this station. The number of staff was increased from 22 to 44, but two have since been transferred to Musselburgh which also provides cover to East Lothian.

Until January 1993, there were five accident and emergency vehicles available for use at Haddington during weekday day shifts, but as demand did not require five crewed vehicles there are now four vehicles.

It should be noted that the numbers of vehicles used can vary at the time of day according to demand and that there has been a significant improvement in response times to emergency calls with the introduction of the techniques of deploying vehicles to key points adjacent to population centres where demand is known to be high instead of requiring all vehicles to return to station.

Women's Aid

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what his Department's contribution to Scottish women's aid was in each of the last three years; and what it will be in 1993-94.

Mr. Lang: Approved funding under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 has been £72,000, £84,911 and £86,642 in the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 respectively. Provision of £87,942 has been approved for 1993-94.

Approved funding under section 9 has been £26,000, £25,000 and £26,130 in the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 respectively. The provision for 1993-94 has not yet been decided.

Doctors (Treatment Prescribing)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to ensure that the financial arrangements associated with the health service reforms do not in practice lead to restraints in doctors' freedom to prescribe treatment according to their clinical judgment.

Mr. Stewart: The new financial arrangements are designed to improve the efficiency of the health service. They will not reduce doctors' freedom to prescribe treatment according to their clinical judgment.

Community Charge Leaflets

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he issues to community charge registration officers and other relevant regional officials concerning the issuing of community charge registration forms and related explanatory leaflets in ethnic minority languages; what such leaflets are issued in respect of the Gaelic language; whether he has any plans to alter existing provisions with the introduction of the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 February 1993]: The form and content of community charge registration inquiry forms and the related explanatory notes are prescribed in The Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) (No. 2) Regulations 1988 (S.I. 1988 No. 1539 (s. 152)). Whether and what supplementary guidance is issued by community charge registration officers or levying authorities is a matter for those officers and authorities.

In administering the council tax, there will be greater variety in the precise information that assessors and levying authorities need to collect in individual cases. They will therefore have discretion as to the details they seek and the manner in which they seek them. Questions relating to the production of forms and explanatory notes should therefore be addressed to individual regional and islands councils as regards their own areas.

The Scottish Office is producing a series of general information leaflets concerning the introduction of the council tax. The principal leaflet, "The Council Tax—A guide to the new tax for local government in Scotland", has been translated into Punjabi, Urdu, Hindi and Cantonese and these translations have been distributed to regional and islands councils for them to use as required. It is for individual levying authorities to consider what additional guidance they wish to provide to meet local or operational requirements. This might include guidance in Gaelic.

Ferries

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to establish sea ferry links between Scotland and EC member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 February 1993]: My right hon. Friend has no such plans, although Scottish Enterprise has commissioned consultants to estimate the financial, economic and environmental impacts of developing new east coast port facilities, in response to potential market interest. Any decision on the establishment of a service, and on the choice of departure port, would, however, be a matter ultimately for the ferry operator.

A8 (Upgrading)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what date he expects the A8 between Baillieston and Newhouse to be upgraded to motorway standard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The report, Roads, Traffic and Safety, published by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland in March last year outlined our plans for upgrading this section of the A8. In the light of developments in north Lanarkshire and the recommendations of the Lanarkshire working party for early upgrading, a complete reappraisal of the design was urgently commissioned from Strathclyde regional council and consulting engineers leading to proposals for a new off-line M8 and retention of the existing A8 as a high-quality collector/distributor road. These proposals are now being taken forward in three phases. While the timetable is ambitious, the upgrading has already been identified as one of the schemes on which we expect construction to be able to start in 1994-95 and for which financial provision has been made.

Shetland Oil Spill

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of all interim compensation payments to date made to salmon farmers affected by the Shetland oil spill; and if compensation will be available to supply industries to the Shetland salmon farming sectors who have suffered loss of income as a result of the Shetland oil spill.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 January 1993]: On the basis of the established principle that the polluter pays, responsibility for compensation rests with the international oil pollution compensation fund and the MV Braer's own insurers. Decisions on compensation payments will be a matter for those two parties in light of the international conventions under which they operate. In addition, however, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland made an initial payment of £1 million to Shetland Islands council for the special bridging fund which he announced on 11 January.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the preliminary assessment of the impact of the Braer disaster on the inter-tidal and benthic communities of Shetland and on the sea-bed biomass.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 15 February 1993]: Sediment samples form part of our comprehensive programme for monitoring the marine environment around Shetland. The analysis of the results will take time. When available they will assist our assessment of the extent and scale of impact on the benthic communities and the sea-bed biomass.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of the first reports from divers inspecting the sub-tidal impacts of the Braer spill.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 15 February 1993]: Adverse conditions have limited the extent of divers' inspection of the sea bed. Oral reports by amateur divers undertaking dives in the area have suggested that, in selected areas such as the Bay of Spiggie, few or no benthic species appeared to have survived; in others such as East Voe of Scalloway there was no evidence of mortality. Arrangements for the marine nature conservation review team of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee to undertake diving inspections around Shetland are currently being made.

Water

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites proposed to him for classification as sensitive areas under the EC directive on urban waste water treatment, including the proposing body, by reason of (a) eutrophication and (b) inland water with a nitrate concentration greater than 50 mg/l.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 15 February 1993]: The urban waste water treatment directive requires member states to identify sensitive areas, in accordance with criteria set out in the directive, by 31 December 1993. The river purification authorities are jointly compiling a list of "candidate" sensitive areas in Scotland which they will submit to the Scottish Office Environment Department for consideration. Similar exercises are being carried out in the remainder of the United Kingdom. An announcement of the areas to be formally identified as sensitive will be made before the directive's deadline.

Energy

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the state aid to the energy sector within Scotland as notified to the European Commission.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 15 February 1993]: A Debt Extinguishment Order was laid before Parliament on 9 March 1990, extinguishing £1,368 million of debt in Scottish Nuclear Ltd. The company was also provided with financial assurances by the Government, to enable it to meet its liabilities from the resources it inherited, under schedule 12 of the Electricity Act 1989. This schedule 12 agreement, for a total of £716 million, was announced on 4 April 1990 by means of a written answer.

The amount of debt in Scottish Power and Scottish Hydro-Electric written off in net terms by the Government amounted to £418 million.

The above matters were notified to the European Commission.

Tied Housing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce legislation in Scotland (a) to facilitate the improvement of the physical condition of tied housing, (b) to clarify farmers' repossession of tied housing and to prevent avoidance of using legal action to remove tenants in tied houses and (c) to improve local authorities' ability to meet the housing requirements of farm and estate workers who previously lived in tied housing; and what representations and discussions he has had in regard to these matters.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 February 1993]: Improvement of the condition of tied houses is the responsibility of the owner in each case, and grant may be available. The owner can obtain possession of the tied house only by recourse to a court order when a tenancy under an employment contract is ended. If a tied tenant is evicted, he can apply to his housing authority, which in assessing the household's needs would take account of the code of guidance on homelessness issued in April 1991 by the Scottish Office.

I have received very few representations on this matter apart from those of the hon. Member.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations and discussions he has had with regard to introducing legislation in Scotland to grant security of tenure to estate and farm workers living in tied houses; what plans he has to introduce such legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 February 1993]: I have received very few representations. Housing provision in these cases is linked to the individual employment contract and any security of tenure would have to be included in such contracts by agreement between the employer and employee. I have no plans to amend existing legislation.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to publicise the alternative housing options open to those estate and farm workers living in tied housing when they retire or are made redundant.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 February 1993]: Exploration of the available housing options is a matter for the individuals concerned. If necessary, they can seek advice from the local housing authority.

Council Housing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current stock of council houses in rural areas in each of the local authorities in Scotland; and what was the stock in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 February 1993]: The information requested is not available.

Court Procedures

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, c. 177, when he hopes to complete his consideration of proposals to save police time in court and of the problem of counter-notices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Consideration of the use of police time at court is only part of a continuing and wider consideration of the operation of current procedures for criminal trials. The Government are determined to maintain, and where possible, improve the high standard of the criminal justice system in Scotland. A number of initiatives has already been taken, including the provision of police witness statements to defence solicitors, which has reduced the demands on police time in the preparation for trial. A review of court programming conducted by Sheriff Principal Nicholson and Sheriff Cox to establish measures for improving court efficiency and providing the best possible service to court users is nearing completion. We are reviewing the scope for changes to the laws of procedure and evidence to secure further improvements. A standing committee on criminal procedure chaired by Lord MacLean has been reviewing the operation of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975. Proposals arising from these reviews will be brought forward for consultation later in the year.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to reduce the amount of police time and resources caused by unnecessary attendance at court for the purpose of giving evidence; and what financial assessment he has made of the cost at the time and resources involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Several steps are being taken. The provision of police witness statements to defence solicitors has already saved police time in the pre-trial period. A review of court programming conducted by Sheriff Principal Nicholson to establish measures for improving efficiency and provide the best possible service for all court users is nearing completion. We are reviewing the scope for changes to the laws of evidence and procedure to secure further improvements. A Standing Committee on Criminal Procedure chaired by Lord MacLean has been reviewing the operation of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975. Proposals arising from these reviews will be brought forward for public consultation later in the year.

The Scottish Office has not undertaken a separate assessment of the costs of police attendance at court. The recent report by the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland on police waiting time at court included an estimate that the cost of police discharging their statutory duty to attend court to give evidence is some £7·8 million per year.

Prison Officers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prison officers are employed in prisons within which the prisoners are of the opposite sex.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: This month there are approximately 70 female officers in uniformed grades in male prison establishments and 24 male uniformed staff at the women's prison in Cornton Vale.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prison officers now wear name badges; and when the staff in all the prisons will be required to wear name badges.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Staff in all Scottish prisons are required to wear name badges and are now doing so. Particular exceptions can however be made where wearing name badges would jeopardise staff safety.

Council Tax

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of disabled persons in each council tax band B to H inclusive who are likely to be eligible for a disabled person's discount; what is the estimated cost of this discount for each band B to H; what it is in total for the whole country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: No such estimates have been made by my Department.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of council tax payers eligible for a second home discount in each band in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole; what is the estimated cost of the discount for each band and in total; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: There are no council tax provisions requiring the identification of properties used as second homes. Such properties will be among those regarded as being empty or no one's sole or main residence for the purposes of determining entitlement to exemption or discount.

The table shows for Strathclyde, and for Scotland as a whole, the estimated number of dwellings which are exempt or subject to discount because they are empty or are no one's sole or main residence. These estimates were made following consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities for the purposes of distributing aggregate external finance (AEF) for 1993-94.

Local authorities will be required, later this year, to supply information on the numbers of bills subject to discount and of exempt properties by category. This information will be used in deciding whether a redetermination of the distribution of AEF for 1993-94 will be necessary, and in distributing AEF for 1994-95.

Number of dwellings

Scotland	Strathclyde
101,350	36,230

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the council tax disability reduction scheme applies to (a) residential care homes belonging to housing associations, (b) those owned by churches and other non-profit making voluntary associations, (c) privately owned and managed residential care homes and (d) such dwellings owned and managed by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The Council Tax (Reductions for Disabilities) (Scotland) Regulations 1992 provide that reductions are available in respect of all dwellings, regardless of ownership, which meet the criteria prescribed, which include a requirement that they are the sole or main residence of a person who is substantially and permanently disabled. The Council Tax (Dwellings and Part Residential Subjects) (Scotland) Regulations 1992 provide, however, that except for parts constituting staff accommodation residential care homes in Scotland will not be treated as dwellings for council tax purposes.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of disabled persons living in houses valued in council tax band A who would be eligible for a discount if their houses were valued in any other band; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: No such estimate has been made. Since dwellings in band A already attract the minimum bill, they are not attracting a higher bill than they would otherwise have done because of the presence of facilities to meet the needs of disabled persons.

Police Restructuring

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has held or proposes to hold with the police authorities regarding the proposals to restructure police forces and police authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The consultation paper on the structure of local government in Scotland, which was issued in October 1992 and sent to all local authorities, invited views on whether changes might be made in the structure and number of police forces and authorities. I do not yet have proposals to put forward on these matters; when I do, there will be an opportunity for police authorities to comment on them.

Legal Aid

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward proposals to provide that, where a claimant suffering from asbestosis or related ailments is in receipt of legal aid but dies before his case is heard, that assistance will be given to this next-of-kin so that the case can proceed through the courts; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State at the Scottish Office, who has ministerial responsibility for legal aid matters, will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Prisons

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for scotland how many persons detained in Her Majesty's prisons sought leave to take a case to the European Commission of Human Rights in each of the past five years; which of those applications led to changes in the standing orders of prisons or in any other prison regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Persons detained in penal establishments in Scotland do not require to obtain the Secretary of State's consent to lodge an application with the European Commission of Human Rights and accordingly information on the number of applications made is not held centrally.

However, I can confirm that in the last five years one such application led to changes in the Scottish prison service standing orders. As a result of implementation of revised procedures following a judgment delivered by the European Court of Human Rights in March 1992, correspondence between prisoners and their legal advisers now normally passes unopened.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that in each prison there is an adequate number of leaflets concerning the right of a prisoner to make application to the European Commission of Human Rights; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Yes. They will be made available in every prison library.

Housing Association Grant

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent discretion is exercised in the determination of the amount of housing association grant available in each district council area; and what performance criteria are used in the exercise.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: My right hon. Friend approves Scottish Homes' total expenditure programme each year. It is for Scottish Homes to decide on the allocation of funds to specific areas and projects. In determining the amount of housing association grant made available to specific areas and consequently to individual housing associations, Scottish Homes will take into account a range of factors. These include detailed background to projects in respect of associations' aims and objectives; ensuring value for money and the effective use of public resources; target client groups and any partnership arrangements, for example with local authorities, the details of which will normally be included in business plans and programme agreements with individual associations.

In-vitro Fertilisation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the availability of in-vitro fertilisation services within the national health service in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: In-vitro fertilisation services are not available within the national health service in Scotland. However, there are four centres attached to the teaching hospitals in Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh and Glasgow which offer these services. The arrangements vary in each centre as do the funding regimes.

Unemployment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland have been unemployed for (i) more than six months, (ii) more than 12 months and (iii) more than two years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The table shows information relating to the numbers of unemployed in Inverclyde, Strathclyde and Scotland, by duration of unemployment, and relates to October 1992:

Numbers unemployed by duration of unemployment

	More than six months	More than 12 months	More than two years
Inverclyde	2,857	1,952	999
Strathclyde	72,092	48,554	24,442
Scotland	125,082	81,019	39,482

Police Stations

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region the locations of (a) full-time manned and (b) part-time manned police stations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Police officers are on call throughout Scotland 24 hours a day irrespective of the opening hours of particular police stations. In the circumstances forces do not, as a general rule, categorise stations in the manner specified by the hon. Member. The information sought is not, therefore, available in the form requested.

Census

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedure was used by the General Registrar's Office to determine geographical distribution of those missed by the census.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: It is estimated that a total of 89,000 people resident in Scotland, or 1·7 per cent. of the population, were not enumerated in the 1991 census. Census figures are not themselves adjusted. However, the estimated under-enumeration has been taken into account in producing the Registrar General's provisional population estimates for Scotland for mid-1991.

The geographical distribution of this under-enumeration was based on comparisons with various administrative sources, most important of which were birth registrations and the national health service central register. In general, the evidence pointed to larger shortfalls in the cities and other urban areas than in rural areas. In preparing the provisional estimates, a relatively simple weighting system was used to take this into account.

Nursing Homes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many privately owned and managed nursing homes were registered in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole in each of the past five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The information on private nursing homes[1] is as follows:

Year (at 31 March)	Strathclyde[2]	Scotland
1988	98	215
1989	125	270
1990	141	316
1991	156	355
1992	176	388

[1] Establishments registered by Health Boards under the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938 (as amended).

[2] Area covered by Health Boards for Argyll and Clyde, Ayrshire and Arran, Lanarkshire and Greater Glasgow.

Adoption

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from voluntary associations, other interested groups and individuals concerning the adoption of babies born to Muslim women in Bosnia who have been raped; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: None, apart from a few inquiries from individual members of the public.

Student Accommodation

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations and discussions he has had about reversing the decision of Scottish Homes to withdraw funding from student housing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: None. Scottish Homes has not made a decision to withdraw funding from student housing.

Murders

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of murders committed in each police force area in each of the past six years; how many of these led to convictions in the High Court; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The table below gives the number of victims in murder cases, and the number of persons convicted of murder in the High Court in these cases for each police force area. The latest available information is for 1991.

Police (Sexual Harassment)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints concerning allegations of sexual harassment by male police officers have been made by women police officers in each police force in each of the past six years; how many of these led to disciplinary proceedings against the alleged perpetrators; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: On the basis of records held by individual police forces the information asked for is as follows:

GP Fund Holders

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total income currently derived from general practitioner fund holders in each health board area.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Allocations made to GP fund holders are not income to the GPs, but funds which they administer to secure treatment for their patients.

GP Referrals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that no general practitioners are required to cease non-emergency extra-contractual referrals if ECR budgets become overspent.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Health boards are required to ensure that patients are treated within the time scales referred to in the patients charter. From monitoring information provided to the Department, there is no evidence to suggest that health boards are restricting non-emergency extra-contractual referrals due to budget constraints.

Hospitals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure elective work is not deferred until a new financial year if provider units overspend.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Health boards and NHS trusts are required to ensure that patients are treated within the time scales referred to in the patients charter. Providers are required to deliver the contracted level of care from within their contract income. Where this is at risk they should advise their purchasers. The Department is not aware of any significant overspends which could lead to elective work being deferred until the next financial year.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he is giving to hospitals which find they have treated more patients than the number specified in their contracts.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: National health service trusts and health boards' directly managed units have been advised to work closely with their purchasers and to share information on activity levels in year. Providers must recognise the need for health boards to manage their resources within their cash limits. Early warning to purchasers of projected variances will provide opportunities to redeploy funds to ensure that patient care is delivered in line with local health strategies.

Health Service Treatment Costs

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what account will be taken of fixed overheads such as capital costs when calculating the costs of treatment (a) as a matter of routine in all cases or (b) as a matter of local discretion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The procedural manual on contracting requires that contract and extra-contractual referral prices are based on full costs with fixed overheads and capital charges allocated to different services on a fair and reasonable basis. The only exception to this requirement is where contracts relate to utilising spare capacity in year where the fixed costs have already been recovered against planned activity. Waiting list initiatives could fall into this category and could be priced on marginal cost. Health boards and NHS trusts do not have any discretion to deviate from these requirements.

EDUCATION

Fridges and Freezers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what are the latest available annual figures for his Department's purchase of domestic fridges and freezers;

(2) how many domestic fridges and freezers his Department intends to purchase in 1993;

(3) if his Department will make it its policy to purchase domestic fridges and freezers that do not contain ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Forth: In 1992 the Department purchased 13 domestic fridges and two freezers. We do not expect to make any further purchases in the current year. When the need to purchase more or replacement equipment arises, we will wherever possible purchase a type which does not contain ozone-depleting substances.

The Department's purchasing policy is to avoid buying materials and equipment which rely on ozone-depleting substances in their use or manufacture, unless suitable alternative products are unavailable. A reduction in the amount of ozone-depleting chemicals used in its premises will automatically follow as a result of the implementation of this policy.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what payments have been made by the Grant-Maintained Schools Centre to Choice in Education, and for what purpose, during the last two years; and if he will make a statement on the financial relationship between the two bodies.

Mr. Forth: The Government pay grant to the Grant-Maintained Schools Centre Ltd. for specific purposes. The purposes to which the Grant Maintained Schools Centre Ltd. puts its other income is a matter for the directors of the company. The Government do not pay grant to Choice in Education Ltd.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what accounts his Department receives from the Grant-Maintained Schools Centre; and if he will place each year's accounts in the Library.

Mr. Forth: The Grant-Maintained Schools Centre Ltd. is required to provide to the Department an audited income and expenditure account, balance sheet and supporting notes in respect of its activities during that year. The accounts for the financial year ending March 31 1989, and for all subsequent years, have been placed in the Library.

Textbooks

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what surveys he is conducting about shortages of textbooks in schools.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is not conducting any survey of the availability of textbooks in schools, although he is continuing to monitor the use made of specific grant funding to support books, equipment and training for the national curriculum. The office for standards in education will ensure that reports of school inspections continue to address the question of resources for the curriculum.

Nursery Education

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what funding will be available for the in-service training of nursery school staff in 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: It is for local education authorities to determine what provision might be made for in-service training for nursery school staff in 1993-94 in the light of their priorities and the overall resources available to them.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to improve the quality and quantity of nursery education in England and Wales.

Mr. Forth: Nursery education in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. It is for local authorities to determine the scope and form of provision for the under-fives in collaboration with other local providers. Within this frame the numbers of under-fives attending maintained schools in England have risen by 200,000 over the period of the present Government, including a rise of 26,000 between 1991 and 1992. Quality issues have been addressed in reports by Her Majestys inspectorate and the report of the Rumbold committee, which informed the educational content of guidance under the Children Act, and training for under-fives workers has been a priority within the grants for education support and training scheme for the last four years. It is for schools to ensure that the quality of their nursery provision receives appropriate attention within their overall planning.

English Tests

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on which date the Schools Examinations and Assessment Council informed schools about which Shakespeare plays had been chosen for the key stage 3 English tests for June 1993.

Mr. Forth: The Schools Examinations and Assessment Council sent out guidance on the 1993 tests to schools in the second week of September 1992. This guidance included information about the three Shakespeare plays from which teachers could choose one for their pupils to answer questions on as part of the English tests for 14-year-olds in June 1993. Schools would have received the information in the second or third week of September.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the publishers who were told which Shakespeare plays had been selected for the key stage 3 English tests in June 1993, and the date on which each was informed.

Mr. Forth: No publishers were so informed. I understand that at least two publishers have sufficient stocks of the Shakespeare plays selected for the English tests for 14-year-olds in June 1993. The selected plays were chosen partly on the basis that most schools had sufficient copies readily available. For those which do not, the Department's grants for education support and training programme support expenditure on buying additional copies.

Written Answers to Questions

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Communities (Amendment) Bill

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he requested legal advice on amendment No. 27 to the European Communities (Amendment) Bill from the Government's Law Officers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Law Officers were formally consulted on 9 February.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the advice his Department has received on amendment No. 27 to the European Communities (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 15 February, at column 27.

El Salvador (Human Rights)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the fulfilment of the guarantee given by Alfredo Cristiani of El Salvador to the United Nations Secretary-General in November 1992 concerning the transfer or retirement of officers from his army who had been named as human rights violators.

Mr. Garel-Jones: In a letter to the President of the United Nations Security Council on 7 January, the UN Secretary-General accepted as satisfactory the measures adopted and implemented by the Government of El Salvador with respect to 87 of the 102 army officers covered by the recommendations of the ad hoc commission set up under the El Salvador peace accords. However, the Secretary General said that the measures adopted in respect of the other 15 officers did not comply with those recommendations. The Security Council on 9 February expressed concern at this situation.

Bosnia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received about the situation in Bosnia since 8 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary of State has received no visitors specifically to discuss Bosnia since 8 February. It is a frequent topic in his discussions with overseas visitors and others. He has received numerous letters from members of the public and hon. Members on behalf of their constituents.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassador in Tunis to convey to the Palestine Liberation Organisation the concern of Her Majesty's Government at the continuing contacts between Yasser Arafat and Saddam Hussein.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The PLO is well aware of our views on Saddam Hussein.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) Official Report, column 358, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The current estimated expenditure by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for publicity in 1992-93 and the budgeted expenditure for publicity in 1993-94 are:

	FCO Diplomatic wing £	FCO ODA wing £
1992-93	951,500	680,000
1993-94	566,001	680,000

Communications Courses

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what equipment those attending communications courses in Northamptonshire in the last six months have been trained; when the models of equipment concerned are to be withdrawn; and what is the per capita cost for those attending such courses, including travelling, subsistence and accommodation.

Mr. Goodlad: No FCO personnel have attended communications courses in Northamptonshire in the last six months. FCO staff have been trained at Hanslope Park in Buckinghamshire on numerous types of equipment over the last six months. Certain radio and teleprinter equipment is now being withdrawn as more cost-effective PC-based communication systems are installed worldwide. The average cost, including all overheads, per student per day is about £90.

Air Travel

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what class of air ticket staff travel when travelling to and from posts abroad; and what assessment he has made of the relative costs to his Department of their travelling on (a) economy or excursion fares and (b) business class fares.

Mr. Goodlad: The types of ticket to which diplomatic service officers and their families are entitled accord with guidance set by HM Treasury. Almost all officers on duty, transfer and mid-tour leave travel economy class on journeys of up to two and a half hours, and business class for longer journeys. Very senior officers may travel in a higher class in certain circumstances, by virtue of their grade or for operational reasons: such cases amount to about 1·5 per cent. of total journeys. All other leave journeys and children's holiday visit passages, including journeys over two and a half hours, are by the cheapest means: economy or Apex fares.

We have not made an assessement of the relative cost of downgrading the class of travel, for example from business to economy class. Air fare pricing is constantly changing: our travel services contractor logs 1·6 million changes a day. We judge that the entitlements set by HM Treasury represent a reasonable balance of economy, operational needs, and comfort for the traveller.

The FCO constantly strives for greater value for money. We have agreements with a number of airlines which provide for substantial discounts, negotiated in partnership with our travel services contractors, with whom we also have a special arrangement to reduce cost.

Mr. Mahal Khalil

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 840, concerning Mr. Mahal Khalil—Ref: IMM/B4131—if he will make it his policy that any appeal made by Mr. Khalil against refusal to grant entry clearance will be accepted; if he will arrange for an appeal to be given priority in view of the delay caused by administrative error; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Should Mr. Khalil submit an appeal against the decision to refuse entry clearance, the entry clearance officer—ECO—at the high commission in Islamabad will accept the appeal. The ECO will give priority to the preparation of his explanatory statement. Mr. Khalil may wish to ask in his appeal that it be given priority, and the independent appellate authority would no doubt give full consideration to such a request.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Legislation)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the consultation procedures with local authorities on the implications for them of intended legislation.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under recent legislation, where consultation is necessary, the Secretary of State is required to consult > "such representatives of local government as appear to him to be appropriate".

For these purposes we consult the local authority associations. Consultation documents cover the resource implications of proposals for local authorities. Even where there is no statutory requirement, it is the Government's policy and practice to consult the associations so that local government's views can be taken into account as early in the formulation of policy and legislation as possible. In addition, there are regular informal meetings between Ministers and the chairmen of the associations at which the direction of policy and the possibility of future legislation are discussed.

These consultation arrangements are kept under review and are regularly discussed with the associations.

Urban Programme

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which organisations are currently being funded under the urban programme in Lambeth.

Mr. Robin Squire: The organisations currently being funded under Lambeth's urban programme are listed as follows

1. London Borough of Lambeth
2. Camberwell District Health Authority
3. West Lambeth District Health Authority

Voluntary Organisations

1. Melting Pot Foundation-Green Badge Taxi School
2. LMHS-Roots and Shoots

Housing Starts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of private sector housing starts in each year from 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of housebuilding starts in England by sector each year from 1988 to 1991 are shown in table 6.1(a) of "Housing and Constuction Statistics 1981-1991". A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Figures for 1992 have been released in an information bulletin. On provisional estimates, there were 99,500 private enterprise and 27,400 housing association starts in England during 1992.

Super-quarries

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of establishing super-quarries in Scotland on the requirement for production of aggregates in England and Wales.

Mr. Baldry: In considering the potential contribution which coastal super-quarries in north-west Europe might make to aggregates supplies, the consultants employed by my Department made a broad assessment of the planning and environmental issues involved. The Government have made it clear that individual applications will need very careful assessment and full regard will be had to their possible environmental impact.

Rent Deposit Scheme

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the pilot rent deposit scheme in west London funded by his Department; and if he will publish a report on the scheme.

Mr. Baldry: The pilot project for a rent deposit fund operated by the Notting Hill Housing Trust—NHHT—and funded by my Department as part of the rough sleepers initiative in central London is due to end on 30 June 1993. My officials are at present discussing with NHHT how best to evaluate the scheme.

Housing Associations (Grants)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will publish the affordability assumption used to determine grant rates to housing associations.

Sir George Young: Outturn rents are determined by housing associations. The Government do not publish the factors and assumptions implicit in the grant rate model or any general definition of affordability, since they do not wish to imply a view as to what constitutes an affordable rent in any particular case.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that all developments at waste incineration sites are subject to full environmental impact assessments;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that environmental impact assessments must be undertaken prior to developing new stacks on existing waste incineration sites;

(3) if he will make it his policy to secure that environmental impact assessments are undertaken prior to any modification of existing waste incineration plants.

Sir George Young [holding answer 19 February 1993]: The Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988, which implement directive 85/337/EEC in respect of projects requiring applications for planning permission, set out the circumstances in which an environmental assessment—EA—is required. For projects of the types described in scheduled 1 to the regulations, which include new waste disposal installations for the incineration of hazardous waste, an EA is mandatory. For projects of the types described in schedule 2 to the regulations, which include new installations for the incineration of non-hazardous waste and modifications of existing hazardous and non-hazardous waste incineration installations, an EA is required if the particular development proposed would be likely to have significant effects on the environment by virtue of factors such as its nature, size or location.

Taxi Drivers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities with responsibility to issue hackney carriage and private hire vehicle drivers' licences which have not adopted the Local Government Miscellaneous Provisions Act 1976.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The following local authorities had not adopted the 1976 Act by 18 February 1993:

Aberconwy District Council
Bridgnorth District Council
Broxbourne Borough Council
Epping Forest District Council
Glanford Borough Council
Leominster District Council
Mid Devon District Council
Mid Suffolk District Council
Monmouth District Council
Newbury District Council
Radnor District Council
Rother District Council
South Buckinghamshire District Council
South Staffordshire District Council
West Lindsey District Council

Unless there is a local Act in force which contains a provision requiring them to be satisfied as to the fitness of an applicant, councils that have not adopted the 1976 Act cannot require a criminal record check of hackney carriage or private hire vehicle driver licence applicants.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what, for the latest available year, was the cost to his Department of expenditure in support of the royal family in respect of (a) expenditure on palaces in occupation of Her Majesty and residences occupied by members of the royal family and (b) the gentlemen-at-arms and yeoman of the guard.

Mr. Key [holding answer 19 February 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

Expenditure in 1991-92 was £26,880,700 on the royal palaces and residences and £47,000 on the gentlemen-at-arms and yeoman of the guard.

Housing Revenue Account Subsidy

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he proposes to make available to London boroughs and the Common Council during 1993-94 in respect of the extra costs due to his decisions on housing revenue account subsidy in respect of debt from the former Greater London council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his answer, 17 February 1993, c. 283-84]: To assist authorities further, my right hon. and learned Friend intends to change the statutory rules on minimum revenue provision so as to reduce the required minimum repayment of principal deemed debt in 1993-94 from an amount of 4 per cent. of the deemed debt to an amount of 0·5 per cent. of the deemed debt.

I am arranging for London boroughs and the Common Council to be notified today of my right hon. and learned Friend's intentions, so that authorities can take account of them when setting their budgets for 1993-94.

TRANSPORT

Safe Buses for Women

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he is carrying out into the operation of safe buses for women; what assessment he has made of their contribution; in which areas they are operating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is concerned with the safety of women as public transport users, as pedestrians and as motorists. No specific research has been undertaken into safe buses for women; our priority is, rather, to promote the safety of all passengers on public transport, including women.

Ships (Seaworthiness)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are taken to ensure that ships entering British coastal waters are seaworthy.

Mr. Norris: All ships entering British coastal waters must carry valid safety certificates issued on behalf of the flag stage stating that the ship meets international requirements.

United Kingdom ships are subject to surveys and random inspections by surveyors from the Department of Transport who also inspect foreign ships arriving at British ports under port state control procedures.

Over 30 per cent., of foreign ships arriving at British ports are inspected under these procedures and it is estimated that 80 per cent. of all ships arriving at ports within the area controlled by the memorandum of understanding for port state control are inspected.

Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency has to invite tenders to extend licence issuing outlets; and how many such additional outlets are to be authorised.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency invited competitive tenders for the issue of vehicle excise licences by advertisement in the national press on 30 October last. The tender process is now under way but it will be some time yet before the final outcome is known. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Rail Travel Concessions

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that under his proposals for the railways all those categories of persons currently enjoying privileged and concessionary travel facilities, in addition to British Rail staff will continue to enjoy those benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail introduced railcards as a commercial decision, not as a result of any legal obligation. There is every reason to believe that the private sector will introduce new initiatives in order to attract more passengers.

However, the provision of the disabled persons railcard is a voluntary initiative on British Rail's part; it is not profitable. The Government wish to guarantee that common discount facilities for disabled people will continue in the future, and a requirement to this effect will be incorporated into every franchise agreement.

British Rail Capital Expenditure

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the capital expenditure of British Rail annually from 1979 on (a) asset replacement, (b) new capital schemes and (c) other capital expenditure.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available in the form requested. However, a breakdown of investment between 1979 and 1991-92 is provided in the table.

British Rail investment expenditure 1979 to 1991-92

£ million cash

	New routes	New electrification	Rolling stock	Other capital investment		Infrastructure revenue investment	Total

1991-92	97	25	325	320	34	205	1,005

Notes:

1. Figures exclude changes in advance payments on rolling stock orders.
2. Infrastructure Revenue Investment is expenditure on infrastructure renewal charged to profit and loss account, exclusive of track renewals.
3. Other non-rail figures for 1979 and 1980 exclude ships, harbours, hovercraft and hotels.
4. Figures rounded to nearest million.

Public Transport

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many persons have been employed in public transport in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland in each year since 1981 by (i) bus services, (ii) train services, (iii) maritime ferry services and (iv) other public transport services.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Information is not available in the form requested. Figures that are available appear in the annual publications "Scottish Transport Statistics" and "Bus and Coach Statistics).

The tables gives the number of staff employed by bus and coach operators based in Scotland, by Scotrail, and by Strathclyde passenger transport executive—underground.

1991-92	19,200	1991-92	9,500	1991-92	310

[1] Figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are annual averages; for all other years they relate to the year end.

[2] Figures are approximate, as only a sample of the smaller bus and coach operators is surveyed.

Figures are not available for maritime ferry services and air transport.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Computer-assisted Transcription

Mr. Soley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he will publish the cost of (a) implementing computer-assisted transcription in the crown courts, the High Court and the Court of Appeal since March 1988, including training costs and (b) introducing tape recording as a means of taking official records in the crown courts, the High Court and the Court of Appeal in the same period.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost of implementing (a) computer aided transcription—CAT—and (b) of introducing tape recordings in the Supreme Court, under the court reporting contracts in place since June 1988, was met by contractors under the terms of their contracts and the information is not available to my Department.

Between 1 April 1988 and 31 December 1992 my Department paid £753,450·79 in training grants to contractors. This sum related almost entirely to the training of CAT operators to assist the contractors in meeting the terms of their contracts, but it is not possible to isolate the exact amount.

The cost of the new tape recording equipment presently being installed in the crown court and comined court centres, together with the cost of tapes over the first year, is £833,000. This sum also includes the cost of some additional county court equipment.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Parliamentary Scecretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what is his Department's policy in respect of supporting computer-assisted transcriptions as a method of keeping offical shorthand records of proceedings in court;

(2) what policy changes have taken place within his Department in relation to the use of verbatim reporters using computer-assisted transcription for recording proceedings in law courts from 1 March 1992 until 14January;

(3) what was the basis for his decision to reduce the number of law courts designated as computer-assisted transcription courts between 1988 and 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department's policy is that CAT should be retained as a court reporting method, but that it should be directed to those courtrooms where its potential attributes, in terms of the speed of delivery of accurate transcript and information technology might be best utilised.

There have been no changes in policy between 1 March 1992 and 14 January 1993. The present court reporting contracts expire on 31 March 1993. In establishing the requirement for CAT in the new contracts, the Department has taken into account the experience gained over the past four years. CAT will be required at courts hearing the most lengthy and complex cases and from which the greatest demand for transcripts arise. In addition, contractors are not barred from using CAT in other courtrooms if they wish.

The new contracts provide for CAT in 179 courtrooms at 35 court centres. The Royal Courts of Justice and the Central Criminal Court will continue to have CAT in every courtroom which currently has CAT.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the Acts of Parliament affecting public scrutiny of the civil service and prohibiting disclosure of information which he is reviewing.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 2 November 1992, Official Report, column 55.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to increase the release of information to Parliament hitherto regarded as confidential for reasons of national security.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear in the House on 6 May 1992, this Government are committed to greater openness and to removing unnecessary secrecy. In pursuit of this policy objective, the Government continue to review records which have a bearing on national security with the purpose of identifying material which can safely be released. There will, however, remain matters relating to security and intelligence on which it is difficult to comment without revealing, by what is said or not said, information that can have a bearing on the effectiveness of the security and intelligence services and the safety of their staff.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were on rule 43 in prisons in (i) England and Wales, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Northern Ireland on 12 February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the number of males and females—both adults and young persons—removed from association under rule 43 of the prison rules and rule 46 of the young offender institution rules on 12 February, in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

	Rule 43/46 Own protection	Rule 43/46 Good order and discipline	Total
Males	1,570	241	1,811
Females	22	7	29
Total	1,592	248	1,840

The table does not include inmates in designated vulnerable prisoner units where ruled 43 and 46 restrictions do not apply.

Responsibility for prisons elsewhere in the United Kingdom rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Offences on Bail

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number and percentage of persons found guilty of further offences whilst on bail in each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991.

Mr. Jack: Although information is not collected centrally on the number of persons found guilty of further offences while on bail, research findings based on samples of a limited size offer an indication of the percentage of persons convicted of an offence while on court bail. For 1981, the Home Office survey "Estimates of offending by those on bail"—statistical bulletin 22/81—offers a national figure of 9 per cent. Between 1986 and 1988, surveys in four police force areas indicated that the percentage of persons given bail by the courts who were convicted of an offence committed while they were on bail ranged between 8 and 12 per cent. A survey by Northumbria police in 1989 gave a higher figure of 17 per cent., but this included offences "taken into consideration" by the courts or dealt with by formal caution—Morgan P., 1992, "Offending while on bail: a survey of recent studies." Home Office, RPU 65.

Re-offenders

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number and percentage of persons found guilty of further offences subsequent to (a) a term of imprisonment and (b) a non-custodial sentence in each police force area in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991.

Mr. Jack: This information is not available. Regular reconviction studies are made, but these are based on relatively small samples and estimates of reconviction rates by police force area are not made. The most recent estimates of national reconviction rates were published in "Prison Statistics 1990".

Security Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish, in any form that does not jeopardise national security, the approximate total number of files accessible by the name of the individual and held by the security service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not possible to disclose such details without jeopardising the service's operational capability.

Wolds Prison (Escape)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the circumstances leading to the escape of a prisoner from Wolds prison on 9 February while he was being escorted for treatment at Hull royal infirmary.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prisoner was taken to Hull royal infirmary on the evening of 9 February. He apparently had difficulty in walking and a wheelchair was used to taken him into the hospital. His handcuffs were removed for the examination and treatment. This is usual practice, particularly where, as here, X-rays are taken. On completion, the Wolds staff went to reapply the handcuffs prior to escorting him back to their vehicle. But before they could do so the prisoner ran through the doors, out of the hospital and along the road. The staff gave chase but lost him. Police were contacted immediately and he was rearrested the following night. An internal inquiry was mounted to review procedures. The Home Office controller was kept informed of events from the start.

Prison Escorts (Escapes)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many escapes there have been from prison escort in each of the last 12 months; and how many of these escapes were from (a) cellular vehicles and (b) hired taxis.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been 124 escapes from escort incidents involving 146 prisoners.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Government expect to abolish prison department custodial remands for 15 and 16-year-olds.

Mr. Jack: We aim to end the remand of 15 and 16-year-old boys to prison custody as soon as enough places in local authority secure accommodation are available. The necessary plans are being forwarded through the Department of Health with the aim of completing them by the end of 1995.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles held in custody on remand or after conviction have in each of the last five years (a) committed suicide or (b) been recorded as having attempted self-mutilation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is set out in the table. Both sentenced and unsentenced juveniles are included. Figures for the incidence of deliberate self-harm prior to 1991 are not available.

Acts of deliberate self-harm by prisoners aged under 17 in HM prison service establishments 1988-92[1]

[1] 17-year-old prisoners were not regarded as juveniles until the Criminal Justice Act 1991 came into effect on 1 October 1992.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policies he has for reducing the disruption to education, training and work to those juveniles who are in custody.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I do not accept that there will be disruption to the education, training and work of juveniles in custody.

I am confident that, where changes take place as a result of the competitive tendering exercise, prison governors and the contractors will arrange a smooth transition from the current to the new education provider so as to ensure an effective continuation in the delivery of education services.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juvenile offenders received custodial sentences in 1979, in 1981 and in 1992.

Mr. Jack: Information on persons aged 14 and under 17 sentenced to immediate custody is published annually in the Command Paper "Criminal statistics, England and Wales". Table 7.15 of the 1989 publication gives the requested data back to 1979. Copies of this publication are available in the Library. 1992 data will not be available until the autumn of 1993.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles (a) under 15 years of age and (b) between 15 and 17 years of age committed offences (i) after a police caution, (ii) while on bail, (iii) while on remand in local authority accommodation and (iv) while undergoing non-custodial community penalties, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: This information is not available. The number of people who commit offences cannot be measured. Research studies of those convicted for offences are made and published from time to time by the Home Office. The most relevant estimates—Home Office statistical bulletin 20/92—are that 11 per cent. of those aged under 14 and 16 per cent. of those aged 14 to 16 who had been cautioned in 1985 were convicted of standard list offences within two years of their caution.

Mrs. Rushina Begum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the decision is going to be taken over the application of Mrs. Rushina Begum—ref. R258995/5 (S) and PO 25725/92—to join her husband in the United Kingdom following the submission of further evidence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A telex authorising the issue of an entry clearance to Mrs. Rushina Begum to join her husband in the United Kingdom was sent on 16 February to the high commission in Dhaka.

Police (Discipline)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police retired on sickness grounds while disciplinary action involving them was under consideration in the most recent year for which the information is available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1991, 19 police officers retired after disciplinary charges had been brought against them, but before those charges had been heard. It is not known how many of those retirements were on medical grounds; nor is it known how many officers retired while disciplinary action was under consideration but before charges had been brought.

Official Secrets Act 1989

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to repeal section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1989.

Mr. Jack: There are no plans to amend the Official Secrets Act 1989.

Members of Parliament

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals for a reduction in the number of hon. Members from 651 to 450.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have no plans to make a reduction in the number of hon. Members of this House.

Rape

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the number of reported offences of rape and indecent assault on women in England and Wales for the year 1979 and for the most recent year for which he has information; and what are the figures for Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Jack: The available information relates to recorded offences and is given in the table.

These figures may reflect increased reporting by victims and/or changes in police recording practices.

Notifiable offences of rape and indecent assault on a female recorded by the police

England and Wales	Number of offences
	1979	1991
Nottinghamshire
Rape	28	111
Indecent assault on female	553	642
England and Wales
Rape	1,170	4,045
Indecent assault on female	11,834	15,792

Miss Carolyn Nunez

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter of 24 January from the hon. Member for South Hams regarding the application by Miss Carolyn Nunez for her British citizenship to be reinstated.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have written to my hon. Friend today about the outcome of this application.

Police, Plumstead

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1), pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 630, what are the current and proposed numbers of uniformed constables in the Plumstead division of the Metropolitan police;

(2), pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 630, what was the number of uniformed police officers in the Plumstead division of the Metropolitan police for each of the years 1991, 1992, and proposed for 1993, broken down by rank.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 19 February 1993]: The information is as follows:

	1991	1992	1993
Chief superintendent	1	1	1
Superintendent	1	1	1
Chief inspector	2	2	2
Inspector	10	9	9
Sergeant	40	37	37
Constable	209	204	194

Although the total number of uniformed constables is due to reduce during the current year, an equivalent increase in civilian staff will release police officers at present in support posts. As a result, the number of constables available for operational duties will be unchanged.

69. Mr. Austin Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 286, what representations he has now received about the number of police officers in the Plumstead and Greenwich divisions of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 19 February 1993]: The following have now written to my right hon. and learned Friend:

the chairman and Secretary of the Greenwich Police/Community Consultative Group:
Mrs. Grace Sole of Charlton;
Mr. Roy Martin of Eltham, the Chairman of the Courtlands Residents Association;
the Chairman of the Eltham Police/Community Working Group;
the Secretary of the Woolwich Central Baptist Church; and the Warden of Trinity College.

My right hon. and learned Friend has also received letters from my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) enclosing correspondence from the chairman and secretary of the Greenwich Police/Community Consultative Group; and the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) enclosing correspondence from the chairman of the Greenwich Police—Greenwich Sector Working Group.

Sex Discrimination Act

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals for the repeal of section 23(1) of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, as subsequently amended, or of section 25(1) of the same Act; and what assessment he has made of the proposed consequences of repeal.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has the matter of sex discrimination in the provision of school places under consideration.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will list those articles, protocols and declarations relating to titles II, III and IV of the treaty of European union as adopted at Maastricht from which no rights and obligations arise which need to be given effect in domestic law.

The Attorney-General: The articles and protocols relating to titles II, III and IV of the treaty of European union amend the Community treaties.

Any amendment to the Bill which, by preventing incorporation of a treaty provision into our domestic law, makes it impossible for the United Kingdom to implement its Community obligations would cause us to regard ourselves as unable to ratify the treaty; and would mean that, if we did ratify, we should be in breach of our treaty obligations as soon as the treaty came into effect.

As a general principle, it is important to preserve consistency between our domestic law and Community law as it is applicable to the United Kingdom. This is best achieved by following the United Kingdom's consistent legislative practice of incorporating in domestic law not only all amendments to the Community treaties but any protocols annexed to those treaties.

The Government therefore continue to oppose deletion of the social protocol from the proposed revised list of Community treaties in section 1(2) of the European Communities Act 1972. But since the social protocol expressly states that acts adopted under the agreement of the other 11 member states shall not be applicable to the United Kingdom, its deletion would not render the United Kingdom incapable of fulfilling its obligations under the treaty of union and would not, therefore, prevent ratification.

Some amendments may add domestic procedures when implementing the treaty obligations. Some protocols may relate only to a particular member state. In such cases, the Government would have to examine carefully whether, if the Bill were amended, our law would still be consistent with our international obligations. But provided this condition were met, amendments in these categories would not be fatal to ratification.

Application of these principles will, I think, make it clear into which category particular amendments fall. If it is not clear how to apply these principles to a particular amendment I am willing to examine the matter carefully and give the House further advice on that amendment.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of cases referred to the Crown prosecution service in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) July to June 1992 resulted in (i) prosecution and (ii) conviction, in each offence category.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

Records are not maintained by the Crown prosecution service of outcomes in relation to offence categories. Percentage calculations of the number of cases prosecuted and the number resulting in a conviction cannot be given on a fully consistent basis for the periods requested. A revised system of data collection was introduced in April 1991 which makes comparison of figures before and after that date inappropriate. The figures in the tables relate to the number of defendants whose cases were handled in the 31 areas of the Crown prosecution service, but do not include specialist casework undertaken at the headquarters of the service.

In table one, in respect of magistrates courts, column 1 shows the number of defendant cases received; column 2 shows the number which proceeded to a full hearing and disposal in the magistrates courts; and column 3 shows the number which resulted in conviction.

Table one—Magistrates Courts

	Column 1 Received	Column 2 Hearings	Column 3 Convicted
1990	1,638,751	1,136,235	1,107,444
1991	1,575,021	1,078,006	1,051,362
July 1991 to June 1992	1,563,686	1,045,279	1,019,615

The number of cases received during a particular period does not equal the number finalised in that period, as incomplete cases are carried over from period to period. Cases which have not been included in the total proceeding to a full hearing and disposal in the magistrates courts include cases committed to the Crown court for trial, cases discontinued, cases resulting in a bind over, cases adjourned sine die, and cases in which the defendant could not be traced. Also not included in column 2 are cases submitted by the police for advice only and some non-criminal proceedings, such as forfeitures under section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959.

In table two, in respect of Crown court cases, column 1 shows the number of cases received; column 2 shows the number of cases which proceeded to a full hearing; and column 3 shows the number which resulted in a conviction.

Table two Crown court

	Column 1 Received	Column 2 Hearings	Column 3 Convicted
1990	152,199	105,516	96,790
1991	153,652	106,026	97,114
July 1991 to June 1992	151,603	105,373	96,596

Cases not included in the total proceeding to a full hearing in the Crown court include cases in which no evidence was offered, cases in which all charges were left on file, cases resulting in a bind over, and cases in which the defendant could not be traced or was found unfit to plead. Also not included in column 2 are cases committed to the Crown court for sentence, and appeals.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministers' Homes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister in how many cases improvements made at public expense in the past five years to the private homes of Ministers, for reasons of personal security, have not been used wholly or mainly for those purposes.

The Prime Minister: I am aware of no such case. Since November 1990, responsibility for the provision of security measures for public figures at threat from terrorist attack has rested with the Home Office. Before November 1990, the provision of security measures was the responsibility of the accounting officer advised by the police and the relevant departmental security officer.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister how many houses or buildings attached to homes belonging to Ministers or their families which have been converted or improved at public expense for reasons of personal security have been the subject of professional fee payments out of public money in the last five years.

The Prime Minister: Where security measures are provided at public expense to a person at threat from terrorist attack, professional fees will be paid if this offers the best value for money. It is not possible to identify every case where such fees have been paid.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out those matters in regard to exports to Iraq on which Ministers are prepared to give substantive answers while the Scott inquiry is sitting.

The Prime Minister: Lord Justice Scott has terms of reference which allow him to look into all the issues which he regards as relevant to his inquiry. Ministers will continue to answer substantive questions where to do so would not prejudice the issues being investigated by the inquiry.

Law and Order

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to transfer responsibility for law and order concerns within Wales to the Secretary of State for Wales.

The Prime Minister: The Government always keep departmental distribution of functions under review.

Polly Peck

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what activities were undertaken in northern Cyprus and the east Mediterranean directly or indirectly by Polly Peck for the United Kingdom Government between 1985 and 1990.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any such activities having been undertaken. A full trawl of all Government Departments and agencies could not be carried out without incurring disproportionate cost.

N M Rothschild

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the work obtained and the fees paid to N M Rothschild in the course of the Government's privatisation programme since 1983.

The Prime Minister: The table shows the Government appointments made to N M Rothschild in privatisations since 1983. The fees paid are a matter of commercial confidentiality. Appointments for adviser to the Government are made following full competition. The Government's consistent practice has been to select the firm offering the best value for money.

N M Rothschild privatisation appointments

Matrix Churchill Trial

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 472, how much of the evidence of the key witness was given in response to questions which referred to the disclosed documents.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 February 1993]: As I indicated in my answer of 4 February, I suggest matters relevant to the Matrix Churchill trial should await the outcome of Lord Justice Scott's inquiry.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister how he intends to monitor the commitment of the Prime Minister of India to respect human rights in Kashmir.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 February 1993]: During my visit, I encouraged the Indian Prime Minister to allow international human rights organisations and others to visit Kashmir. We shall continue to monitor the situation through our high commission in Delhi, through our contacts with human rights organisations and through media reports. We shall continue to raise human rights issues with the Indian Government.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provisions of European legislation govern the introduction of a 5 per cent. VAT rate of goods and services now (a) exempt, (b) zero rated and (c) subject to the standard rate.

Sir John Cope: Article 1(1) of Council directive 92/77/EEC adopted on 19 October 1992, replacing article 12(3) of the sixth VAT directive 77/388/EEC, provides for reduced rates of VAT, of not less than 5 per cent., which may be applied to goods and services in a list annexed to the directive, regardless of their current VAT rating.

In addition, article 1(4)(b) of 92/77/EEC, replacing article 28(2) of 77/388/EC provides for the application of a reduced rate, of not less than 5 per cent., to goods and services which at 1 January 1991 were subject to a zero rate in accordance with Community law.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much additional revenue would be obtained by applying VAT at a level of (a) 5 per cent. and (b) 17·5 per cent., to each of (a) food, (b) children's clothes and shoes, (c) public transport, (d) energy, (e) newspapers and (f) books.

Sir John Cope: Table D1 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement" shows the estimated cost of the main VAT zero rates. These estimates suggest the following yields:

		£ billion
	5 per cent.	17·5 per cent.
(a) Food	2·0	7·0
(b) Children's clothes and shoes	0·2	0·6
(c) Passenger transport	0·5	1·9
(d) Domestic fuel and power	0·5	1·8
(e) Books, newspapers and magazines	0·3	1·1

The estimates make no allowance for the behavioural responses to applying VAT to these categories, so that actual yield would probably be less than suggested.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on the level of sales of local newspapers of the imposition of a standard rate of VAT on newspapers.

Sir John Cope: The Institute for Fiscal Studies has estimated an own price elasticity of −0·657 for all leisure goods, which include newspapers. This elasticity suggests that a 17½ per cent. increase in price would reduce demand, in volume terms, by around 10 per cent.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many farmers and other eligible producers have registered for the VAT flat-rate scheme for farmers.

Sir John Cope: The flat rate scheme for farmers started on 1 January. Up to 17 February, 85 certificates had been issued to persons opting to join the scheme.

Trade Union Subscriptions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the administrative savings and the tax expenditure if trade union subscriptions were paid net of tax with block credit of tax directly to trade unions;

(2) if he will estimate how many trades union members (a) obtain and (b) are eligible for tax relief on their subscriptions.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that 63,000 people are receiving relief through their PAYE code numbers for that part of a subscription to a trade union which is attributable to the provision of superannuation, life insurance or funeral benefits. The information required to estimate the number of union members eligible for the relief and the potential tax cost of moving to a relief by deduction system is not available. The cost of setting up and operating a scheme of relief by deduction cannot be estimated with sufficient certainty to establish whether net administrative savings would result.

Bank Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will propose legislation under which the auditors of all banks regulated under the Banking Act 1987 would be appointed by the regulatory body.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to do so.

Green Pound

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect of the departure of sterling from the exchange rate mechanism on the value of the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Since sterling left the exchange rate mechanism, the green pound has devalued by 17·86 per cent. against the green ecu.

Tax Income

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the Government's tax income currently goes on (a) servicing debt, (b) unemployment benefit and its administration and (c) other transfer payments.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the breakdown of general Government receipts shown in table 3.10 of the 1992 "Autumn Statement", Cm. 2096; to the breakdown of general Government expenditure shown in tables 2.5 and 2.6 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement", Cm. 2219; and to the figures for unemployment benefit administration in figure 27 of the "Social Security Departmental Report", Cm. 2213.

Revenue Expenditure

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the Government's current revenue expenditure goes on (a) servicing debt, (b) unemployment benefit and its administration and (c) other transfer payments.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the breakdown of general Government expenditure shown in tables 2.5 and 2.6 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement", Cm. 2219; and to the figures for unemployment benefit administration in figure 27 of the "Social Security Departmental Report", Cm. 2213.

Personal Sector Debt

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) of 10 February, Official Report, column 632, if he will give a regional breakdown of the levels of personal sector debt per £100 of disposable income for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: Regional figures for the level of personal sector debt outstanding are not available.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what, for the latest available year, was the cost to his Department of expenditure in support of the royal family in respect of the central chancery of the orders of knighthood.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 19 February 1993]: Assuming that the right hon. Member wishes to update information contained in the 1990 report of the royal trustees—HC 629, October 1990—the comparable outturn for staff costs for 1991-92 was £201,000. In addition, the Treasury paid £364,000 mostly for the costs of the insignia themselves.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Prayers

38. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will bring forward proposals to arrange for Prayers to be moved from the Floor of the House to the Crypt and for questions to begin at half-past two o'clock.

Mr. Newton: No.

Annual Parliamentary Calendar

39. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he will be in a position to announce an annual parliamentary calendar.

Mr. Newton: I have already made progress towards giving the House greater notice of recess dates, having announced Easter recess dates on 26 November and the Whit recess dates on 4 February. How far it will prove possible to build further on this is of course linked with the discussions on the Jopling report to which I referred in an earlier reply today.

European Communities (Amendment) Bill

40. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hours have now been spent on the Committee stage of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Newton: Before today's proceedings, the House has spent 75 hours and 14 minutes on 11 days in Committee on the European Communities (Amendment) Bill.

Annie's Bar

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what is his policy on the continued existence of Annie's Bar.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The Committee is at present undertaking an inquiry into refreshment services for the House of Commons. The functions of the various Refreshment Department facilities, including Annie's Bar, are being considered during that inquiry together with the possible provision of new services. The Committee hopes to report later this year.

Visitors (Refreshment Facilities)

Mr. Enright: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what financial provision will be made for basic refreshment facilities for visitors.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The Committee is including consideration of the possible provision of refreshment facilities for line of route visitors in its current inquiry into refreshment services for the House of Commons. It is, therefore, too early to establish what financial provision might need to be made.

Smoking

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what plans he has to review the policy regarding smoking in eating areas in the House.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The policy regarding smoking in the various Refreshment Department outlets is kept under consideration in the light of customer demand.

Hair Dryers and Showers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) how many (a) hair dryers and (b) showers are planned to be installed in the Palace of Westminster and outbuildings occupied by House of Commons staff;

(2) at whose request, and on whose authority, a hair dryer was installed in the ladies' wash room in 3 Dean's Yard; what was the cost of installing it; and under what budget the cost will fall.

Mr. Ray Powell: These are matters for the Director of Works.

Wheelchair Members

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what arrangements are being made to help hon. Members confined to wheelchairs to work in the Chamber and offices in the House.

Mr. Ray Powell: This matter is currently under consideration by the Accommodation and Works Committee in the context of a comprehensive survey on access for the disabled commissioned by its predecessor Committee.

Blood Donors

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what plans he has to facilitate the giving of blood by all those who work in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The north London centre of the blood transfusion service operates a two-day clinic in the Treasury once every six months when Members, their staff and staff of the House may give blood. The next planned visit is between 29 and 30 March. Arrangements for it may be made through the nursing sister.

Car Parking

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what consideration is being given to proposals to increase the amount of car parking available to hon. Members.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The Administration Committee is currently examining existing and future car parking requirements of this House and their regulation by the Serjeant at Arms. This inquiry will be able to consider the issue raised by the hon. Member.

Payroll and Personnel System

Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if he will make a statement on the reasons for the introduction, and the budgeted and actual cost, of the new payroll and personnel system for House of Commons staff; and what savings he expects to be made in each of the next two years.

Mr. Beith: The new payroll and personnel system is being introduced to replace two separate systems, one of which was introduced in 1984, and the other in 1988. The new system will provide additional personnel information and improved payroll analyses to facilitate the introduction of financial management systems within the House. It will also provide the facility for payroll and personnel records functions for the staff of the Parliamentary Works Directorate.

Outline provision for hardware and software costs was made in the estimates for £130,000, excluding training costs and VAT, for the new system. The actual cost is expected to be slightly less than this figure. No direct staff savings are expected, but the new system will allow for an increase in the workload of some 15 per cent. as a result of the transfer to the House of the staff of the Parliamentary Works Directorate.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Package Travel Industry

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement regarding his decision on the possible reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of the Airtours plc bid for Owners Abroad plc.

Mr. Heseltine: I shall take a decision on whether to refer this proposed acquisition to the MMC in due course, following advice from the Director General of Fair Trading. When taking that decision, I shall take into account all relevant factors.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy regarding the concentration of ownership within the package travel industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The main, but not exclusive, consideration when assessing mergers in the travel industry, as in any other industry, is the likely impact of the merger on competition in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will refer the Airtours bid for Owners Abroad to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of a successful bid by Airtours for Owners Abroad on consumer choice, value for money and employment within the United Kingdom travel industry; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what percentage of the market share Airtours would hold in the event of its bid for Owners Abroad being successful.

Mr. Heseltine: I shall take a decision on whether to refer this proposed acquisition to the MMC in due course. When taking that decision, I shall take into account all relevant factors.

Details of current market share figures for the relevant markets in this case have been provided by a number of sources. Section 133(1) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 requires that information with respect to any particular business and obtained in this way should not be disclosed without the consent of the parties.

Land Mine Exports

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on United Kingdom policy on the export of land mines.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office wrote to the hon. Gentleman on 22 January setting out the Government's views on this matter. I have nothing further to add.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licences have been granted for the export of land mines for each year since 1988.

Mr. Needham: Separate statistics are not maintained for land mines and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Land mines fall within heading ML4a of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992, which prohibits the export without a licence of a wide range of bombs, torpedoes, rockets, missiles and similar weapons.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had regarding the United States Government's embargo on the export of land mines.

Mr. Needham: None.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1992, Official Report, column 593, on ECGD, what response he has received to the offer of voluntary redundancy; how many staff have chosen (a) early retirement, (b) redundancy, (c) transfer to other divisions of his Department and (d) to other departments in south Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The ECGD has issued a questionnaire to all its staff asking them to indicate their preferred options for location and continuity of employment. The objective is to establish the framework for an orderly run down in staff numbers over the next 12 months. The definitive position is unlikely to emerge for some months, but the early indications are that the desired run down will be achieved by wholly voluntary means.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, columns 496-97, (a) what is his Department's (i) current estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (ii) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94, exclusive of energy and (b) what is his Department's energy-related expenditure, as to (1) current estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (2) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Eggar: Estimated expenditure on publicity in 1992-93[1] is:

	£ million
Energy-related	1·2
Other	7·0

---

[1] Central publicity budget.

Allocations for 1993-94 will be made according to need during the year.

Political Risk Insurance

Ms. Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what short-term insurance or reinsurance is offered by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to United Kingdom exporters to non-OECD countries to cover political risk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Since December 1991, the privatised successor of the insurance services group of the ECGD has assumed responsibility for the provision to United Kingdom exporters of short term export credit insurance previously provided by the ECGD.

The new company currently sources over 90 per cent. of its reinsurance needs, for both commercial and political risk worldwide, from the private market. The ECGD participates in the company's reinsurance treaties so as to supplement the cover available from the market, thereby ensuring that the company's full needs are met. This transitional support will be available up to December 1994 in order to give time for the new company to arrange to source its full reinsurance requirements from the private market.

Quite separately, the ECGD provides the new company with 100 per cent. reinsurance of the risks, largely political, arising on certain high risk markets for which no capacity is being made available by the private market. This facility is not time limited and, subject to satisfactory financial performance, it will continue for as long as the Government consider it essential to meet the reasonable needs of United Kingdom exporters.

These arrangements are intended to ensure that United Kingdom exporters do not suffer any reduction in export credit insurance facilities as a result of the privatisation.

EC Funds

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to have Merseyside included in objective 1 status by the European Community; what estimates he has made of assistance towards infrastructure, industrial development and training that such status would confer on Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) on 17 February 1993, Official Report, column 269. It is too early to estimate the amount of financial assistance which objective 1 status would confer on Merseyside. This would depend on the Council's decisions on the extent of objective 1 regions elsewhere and on the criteria for the distribution of the funds between objective 1 regions. The Council will not decide which areas will become eligible for several months.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a breakdown of the daily financial effect on British Nuclear Fuels of the delay in the commissioning of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the company.

Office of Telecommunications

Mr. Alexander: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the successor to Sir Bryan Carsberg as director general of Oftel.

Mr. Heseltine: I have today appointed Mr. Don Cruickshank as Director General of Telecommunications from 1 April.

Mr. Cruickshank has had a varied and successful career in business. He was managing Director of Virgin Group plc from 1984-89 and before that, Commercial Director at Times Newspapers from 1977-80 and a Director of the Information and Entertainment Division of Pearson plc from 1980-84. Since 1989 he has been Chief executive of the national health service in Scotland, where he has done excellent work.

Since the privatisation of BT in 1984 the telecommunications industry has changed substantially and since the further liberalisation set in train by the Duopoly review in 1991, there has been an increasing number of operators entering the market in competition with BT. I wished to appoint someone to this important post who had direct experience of competition as a businessman. Mr. Cruickshank fulfils that criterion admirably and will, I am sure, do a very good job.

Since Sir Bryan Carsberg became Director General of Fair Trading in June 1992, Bill Wigglesworth, the then deputy director general of Oftel, has been acting as Director General and I would like to pay tribute to the sterling way in which he has carried out his duties. He will return to his position as deputy director from 1 April.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Prisons

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the manning level of prison officers in (a) Crumlin Road, (b) the Maze, (c) Maghaberry and (d) Magilligan, for each year since 1990.

Mr. Mates: The table shows the manning levels of prison officers at these prisons since 1990:

	Average staff in post
Prison	1990	1991	1992
Belfast	667	683	716
Maze	1,148	1,107	1,037
Maghaberry	583	596	620
Magilligan	495	492	495

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to introduce the national vocational qualifications into Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Northern Ireland has been involved in the development of national vocational qualifications—NVQs—from their inception in 1986. NVQs have been available in Northern Ireland since that date as in the rest of the United Kingdom, as they have been developed by the awarding and validating bodies.

Prison Education

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on education in each of the prisons in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mates: The table shows a breakdown, prison by prison, of the expenditure on education, including staff costs, over the last five years:

	Belfast £	Maze £	Maghaberry £	Magilligan £	YOC Hydebank £
1988-89	117,000	259,000	110,000	93,000	137,000
1989-90	118,500	274,500	144,000	91,500	134,000
1990-91	117,000	267,500	235,000	111,000	189,500
1991-92	153,000	290,000	215,000	140,000	232,000
1992-93	127,000	345,000	202,000	118,000	216,000

All figures are to the nearest £500.

Claimants, Newry and Armagh

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of claimants in each ward within the constituency of Newry and Armagh, or such relevant statistics as are available, who are in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit, (b) income support, (c) family credit, (d) disability living allowance and (e) child benefit.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 19 February 1993:

As I am responsible for Social Security operational matters your recent Parliamentary Question on the number of claimants in each ward within the constituency of Newry and Armagh who are in receipt of Unemployment Benefit, Income Support, Family Credit, Disability Living Allowance and Child Benefit has been passed to me for reply.

I regret that the information is not available in the format requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Some information however, is available on Unemployment Benefit and Income Support for the Newry and Armagh Social Security Office areas and this is set out below.

Date of most recent information	Benefit claimed or received	Total number of customers claiming each benefit in Newry Social Security Office area	Total number of customers claiming each benefit in Armagh Social Security Office area
14 January 1993	Unemployment Benefit	5,396	2,717
30 November 1992	Income Support	10,894	5,612

I hope you find this information helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Rreport and copies will be placed in the Library.

Bus and Goods Vehicle Licences

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his review of the conditions of the issuing of operators licences for buses and goods vehicles in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Because of the increasing differences between the operator licensing regimes in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Department of the Environment undertook a review of the Northern Ireland licensing system. Consultation with all interested parties was carried out in 1992 and the main recommendations of the review report were generally welcomed. Implementation of these recommendations would have significant resource implications and I am considering the way forward.

Buses

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new buses have been purchased for public use in Northern Ireland over the past three years.

Mr. Atkins: I am advised by the managing director of Ulsterbus Ltd./Citybus Ltd. that the companies purchased 246 new buses over the past three years. None of the other operators of stage carriage services in Northern Ireland purchased any new buses in that period.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many public service buses have been found unroadworthy following inspection carried out by the Department of the Environment in Northern Ireland over the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested has been recorded only since September 1992, since when 114 buses have been examined of which 15 were found to be unroadworthy.

Fair Employment

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a statistical breakdown of employment in the various sectors of the Belfast education and library board in keeping with the 1991 census of the Belfast area as they reflect the percentages of Protestants and Roman Catholics employed.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 19 February 1993]: The information is as follows:

Belfast education and library board staff (January 1992)

Section	Total number of staff 1	Protestant		Roman Catholic		Non determined

Source:—Belfast Education and Library Board's Fair Employment Review

The 1991 labour force survey revealed that in the Belfast education and library board area 53·2 per cent. of the economically active population was Protestant, and 46·8 per cent. was Roman Catholic.

SCOTLAND

General Practitioners

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what services are made available to GPs who are (a) non-fund holding and (b) fund holders.

Mr. Stewart: The range of services made available by national health service provider units to general practitioners does not vary according to whether or not they are fund holders. Rather than relying on the health board's purchasing arrangements, GP fund holders are able to use their funds to purchase the following hospital and community health services directly from providers:

—a specified range of elective surgical procedures;
—most out-patient treatments and diagnostic tests;
—certain specified direct access services;

and from 1 April 1993:

—certain community nursing services;
—additional direct access services;
—most out patient mental health treatments.

In respect of these services GP fund holders are required to work within their overall fund as approved by the health board, but are otherwise not constrained by any limitation on the funds available to a health board for referrals for these services.

In addition from 1 April 1993 as announced by my noble Friend, the Minister of State on 26 January, GP fund holders, where appropriate and qualified and with the prior approval of the health board, will be able to be reimbursed from their fund for providing certain specific diagnostic and minor surgical procedures for their patients.

Nimmo Smith/Friel Report

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy and a transcript of a tape involving the Sun newspaper and a lawyer submitted as evidence to the Nimmo Smith/Friel inquiry and copies of letters to the Lord Advocate of 4 and 12 February relating to the Nimmo Smith/Friel report and the replies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

World Summit for Children

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase resource allocations for the areas of clean water and sanitation and basic education, in the light of agreements made at the world summit for children.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply of 15 February 1993 at columns 43-44.

United Kingdom Food Support

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people in (a) Somalia and (b) Eritrea are now estimated to be receiving daily food support from the United Kingdom; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since January 1992, we have pledged 48,100 tonnes of bilateral food aid worth £7,798,000 to Somalia and 17,596 tonnes worth £3,829,000 to Eritrea. It has all been delivered. Bilateral food aid is channelled through the World Food Programme, the International Committee of the Red Cross and British non-governmental organisations who distribute it according to need: actual numbers of those receiving food financed by the United Kingdom are not readily available.

Kenya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Kenya of the Minister for Overseas Development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 February 1993]: During her visit to Kenya my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development met President Moi and other Kenyan leaders for discussions on a range of political and economic issues, including aid. She also visited a drought-affected district in the north-east to see relief and rehabilitation work, and pledged a further £750,000 to help drought victims in the Turkana region.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many convoys carrying humanitarian aid to Sarajevo and other towns in Bosnia Herzegovina by road have had as their point of departure (a) Belgrade and (b) Split; what have been the total quantities of supplies transported in each case; how many air-relief flights have delivered such aid; and what has been the quantity transported.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 9 February 1993]: Exact figures for the number of road convoys which have travelled into Bosnia Herzegovina are not available. However, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees who is co-ordinating the international community's response to this crisis estimates that over 57,000 tonnes of relief supplies have been delivered by road to Bosnia Herzegovina since July 1992. This consists approximately of 22,000 tonnes delivered from Split and Zagreb; 3,550 tonnes from Belgrade; and 31,900 tonnes from Metkovic (which is now used as the principal depot for convoys into Bosnia from the south, and which is supplied from Split and Ploce).

In addition a total of 2,646 relief flights have been made, delivering 29,098 tonnes of humanitarian relief; all of these were to Sarajevo.

Croatia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what avenues are in use for sending humanitarian aid in postal packages to United Nations-protected zones in Croatia, including the routes employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 12 February 1993]: We are not aware of any suitable avenues for delivering humanitarian aid to United Nations protected zones in Croatia by post. We have recommended that people wishing to assist should do so through established charities operating in the former Yugoslavia.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Rugby League

17. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has made to remove restrictions placed on Rugby League players; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: As the hon. Member will be aware, sports organisations in this country are independent bodies which are free to lay down their own rules and regulations. I therefore have no plans to intervene in this matter. However I welcome the recent introduction of the "free gangway" system which allows rugby players to play both codes at amateur level and for clubs to share facilities, and hope that rugby authorities will do their utmost to ensure its effective implementation.

BBC (Funding)

18. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what arrangements he has made to consult representatives of elderly people on the future funding of the BBC.

Mr. Brooke: We have sent a copy of the consultation document about the future of the BBC, which asks questions about future funding, to four organisations representing elderly people, and have asked for their views. We welcome views from other organisations representing the elderly, as well as from interested individual viewers and listeners.

Government Art Collection

19. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will ensure that art treasures in the charge of Her Majesty's Government will be retained.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the question from the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott).

Tourism

20. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he intends to meet the chairman of the British Tourist Authority to discuss the future of tourism in Great Britain.

25. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he next intends to meet the chairman of the British Tourist Authority to discuss the future of tourism in Great Britain.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of the British Tourist Authority. I expect to discuss the authority's corporate plan with the chairman when it is submitted in the spring.

North West Tourist Board

21. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he intends to meet the chairperson of the North West tourist board to discuss funding for that body.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend plans to visit the North West tourist board within the next few months. The allocation of Government funds to the regional tourist boards is a matter for the English tourist board.

Windsor Castle (Fire)

22. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he is now in a position to announce the cost of the Windsor fire; and to which budgets the cost will fall.

Mr. Brooke: A very broad initial estimate of the costs of restoration suggests a figure in the range £30 to £40 million depending on the form of restoration chosen. More precise figures will not be available until decisions have been taken on the form of restoration.

Fossils and Offshore Sites

21. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the protection of fossils and offshore sites.

Mr. Key: I informed the House on 7 December 1992 that I have accepted that natural history objects, including fossils, should be brought within our export controls. We intend shortly to revise our national export controls in the Export of Goods (Control) Order to include skeletal remains and fossils, found in United Kingdom soil or territorial waters.

Local Authority Arts Provision

26. Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the impact of the current year's local government finance settlement on local authority arts provision.

Mr. Brooke: Most local authorities are still in the process of determining their budgets for 1993-94, so an overall assessment of planned local authority provision for the arts cannot yet be made. Arts provision is discretionary and it is for authorities themselves to fix its level. They must, of course, work within overall expenditure constraints. I hope that they will, nonetheless, continue to recognise the very real benefits of spending in support of the arts.

28. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to visit West Yorkshire to discuss the provision of art and recreation with the leaders of the local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I will be visiting Leeds and Sheffield shortly. I also visited Leeds last October. My Department assists in the provision of art and recreation facilities through its grants-in-aid to the Arts Council and to the Sports Council, and through its business sponsorship incentive schemes for sport and the arts; in addition, it assists in the provision of sports and active recreational facilities through credit approval cover to local authorities.

Sports Facilities

27. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received about the wider use of publicly owned sports facilities.

Mr. Brooke: My Department has been involved in discussions with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Association of District Councils, the Association of County Councils and the Sports Council about schedule 11 of the current Education Bill. This clarifies the legal position in relation to dual use joint management agreements and will facilitate the wider community use of school sports facilities.

Public Libraries

29. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to review the public library service in London.

Mr. Key: I have already initiated a major review of the public library service in England to provide a basis for its development up to and into the next century.

Cycling Holidays

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information his Department has about the numbers of people who take cycling holidays in Britain each year.

Mr. Key: The United Kingdom travel survey indicates the figure in 1991 for people who take holidays in Britain with the primary interest is cycling as 1 per cent. (approximately 0·58 million trips).

However, 3 per cent. (around 1·74 million) of British tourists taking holidays in the same year stated they engaged in cycling as part of their leisure activities.

Sport

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what public money has been allocated to sport in each of the past three years at 1993 prices; what is proposed for the coming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My Department's direct funding of sport is its grant-in-aid to the Sports Council (Great Britain) and the Football Licensing Authority (FLA), and its support for the new business sponsorship scheme for sport, Sportsmatch.

Grant-in-aid to the Sports Council (Great Britain) and to the FLA in the current and last two financial years, expressed in 1993-94 prices, are:

£ million	Sports Council (GB)	FLA
1990-91	51·244	0·125
1991-92	49·973	0·775
1992-93	50·103	0·822

The grant-in-aid to each body in 1993-94 will be £50·604 million and £0·9 million respectively.

Sportsmatch was launched in the current year. I expect to provide £1·17 million in this financial year, and £3 million next year (cash prices).

The Government also provide substantial support for local authority revenue spending on sport through the revenue support grant arrangements. Basic credit approvals amounting to £79 million (cash price) for local authority capital spending have also been provided between 1991-92 and 1993-94. Sport has also benefited through the Government's inner city programmes.

It is also making available a total of £73 million (cash price) in support of Manchester's bid to host the Olympic Games in the year 2000.

Furthermore, reductions in the rate of pool betting duty are contributing approximately £44 million (cash price) per year to the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and to the Football Trust.

EDUCATION

Religious Education

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will publish the National Curriculum Council's analysis of agreed syllabuses for religious education.

Mr. Forth: The decision to publish such documents is one for the National Curriculum Council.

Access Funds

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications for each access fund have been made in each year since the establishment of the funds.

Mr. Boswell: The information is not available in the form requested. Many institutions make no distinction between the three funds when considering applications. Others have considered applications from students on a termly or ad hoc basis, and therefore make more than one payment to individual students.

From the available information it is estimated that the numbers of applications for the three funds which the Department has provided are as follows:

	Number
1990-91	116,000
1991-92	118,200

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what monitoring is conducted by his Department of the administration of student access funds.

Mr. Boswell: All institutions are required to account fully for their use of the access funds. Each is required to provide audited accounts, monitoring information and main uses reports for each year of operation of the funds.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Crichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is as listed. No contracts were awarded in these periods to Crichton Roberts or Leopold Joseph.

Grant-maintained Schools

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education where he intends to hold conferences on grant-maintained status for schools; and if he will provide details of the target audience and costs, including the cost of publishing and distributing literature for those conferences.

Mr. Forth: Conferences for headteachers and governors of local education authority maintained schools are planned for Nottingham and Birmingham. The conference literature comprises a letter of invitation and a copy of the standard grant-maintained information pack. The unit cost of producing the information packs is 79p. Mailings of invitations and packs fall within the terms of the contract with the departmental despatch centre and therefore costs cannot be identified separately. The cost of conference accommodation and facilities is expected to be approximately £6,700 for each event. Specialised support services for each conference are likely to cost around £6,500. Further conferences will be held across the country to meet demand.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide a breakdown on the costs, including the cost of publication and distribution of promotional literature, of the "Going Grant-maintained Conference" held on 10 and 11 February in Newcastle.

Mr. Forth: The conference material for the two one-day events held in Newcastle comprised a letter of invitation and a copy of the standard grant-maintained information pack. Production costs of the information packs were approximately £2,600. The mailing of invitations and packs fell within the terms of the contract with the departmental despatch centre and distribution costs cannot be identified separately. The total costs for conference accommodation and facilities were approximately £12,300. Specialised support services for the two conferences cost approximately £11,000.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the approved capital allocations for grant-maintained schools for the year 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is contained in the following tables. Table A lists those self-governing state schools (grant-maintained schools) operating as at the end of December 1992 which are to receive a capital grant allocation for 1993-94. Table B shows the allocations made to these schools under the technology schools intiative. Schools which became self-governing state schools on 1 January 1993 were invited to submit bids by 25 January 1993 for named capital projects and for resources under the technology schools initative. Decisions on the allocations for these schools have not yet been made.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many parents rang the telephone helpline set up in respect of advice on grant-maintained schools by his Department on 1 February, for each of the first two weeks of operation.

Mr. Forth: During the first weeks of operation, the helpline received 271 calls, of which 214 were from parents. The number of calls received during the second week was 848, of which 674 were from parents. This gives a total of 1,119 calls during the first two weeks, of which 945 were from parents.

Schools, Northamptonshire

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the schools in Northamptonshire which (a) are operating as grant-maintained, (b) are approved for grant-maintained status but not yet open, (c) are schools which have voted yes and published proposals for grant-maintained status, (d) are schools which have voted yes but not yet published proposals and (e) are schools whose applications have been rejected.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

Coventry LEA

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide extra resources for education for Coventry local education authority.

Mr. Forth: Over the three financial years 1990-91 to 1992-93, the education component of Coventry's assessment has increased by almost 21 per cent. once the 1992-93 additional grant for teachers' pay has been taken into account. This is a substantial increase, well in excess of the rate of inflation.

The local authority finance settlement for 1993-94 allows for an increase of 2·6 per cent. in education standard spending once account is taken of the transfer of responsibility for most further education to the Further Education Funding Council. This increase is reasonable, given that inflation is falling and that public sector pay settlements in the coming financial year should be restricted to between zero and 1·5 per cent. Coventry will receive its fair share of this increase.

Sidney Stringer School, Coventry

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the subject matter of his consultation with governors of Sidney Stringer school in Coventry.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any issues arising from consultation of the governors of Sidney Stringer school. In conducting consultation exercises, from time to time, it is normal practice to consult a wide range of interested bodies, including teacher unions.

Nurseries

79. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest information on the number of children attending nursery schools and nursery classes in each local education area in England.

Mr. Forth: The number of pupils of all ages attending maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1992 are shown in the table.

Publicity

81.Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 446, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: As noted in the Department's annual report (Cm 2210), which was laid before Parliament on 9 February, expenditure by the Department on publicity and publications, excluding statutory orders, is expected to be about £6·8 million in 1992-93. The provisional budget for 1993-94 is £8·0 million.

Further and Higher Education

97. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the percentage of students who entered further and higher education for the latest year for which information is available; and what corresponding information he has for each EC country.

Mr. Boswell: In 1991-92 some 67 per cent. of 16-year-olds and 49 per cent. of 17-year-olds participated in full-time education in schools, sixth-form colleges and further education colleges in England. In the same year some 23 per cent. of 18 to 20-year-olds in Great Britain entered full-time higher education. Further details are shown in tables 17 and 21 of the departmental report, Cm 2210. Comparisons with certain EC countries are shown on pages 16 and 17 of "Education Statistics for the UK" 1992 edition, a copy of which is in the Library.

Primary and Secondary Schools (Resources)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to rectify the imbalance of resources between primary and secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: It is for each local education authority to determine the appropriate balance of spending between the primary and secondary school sectors. The 1993-94 local authority grant settlement allows for local authorities in England to spend £16,854 million on education overall, 2·6 per cent. more than the comparable figure for 1992-93.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to evaluate the impact of the decision to cease funding for health education co-ordination within the grants for education support and training programmes on drug abuse work.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend will look to the Office for Standards in Education to provide him with information and advice about all aspects of education provision in schools. This will include provision made for preventive health education, aspects of which are included in the national curriculum and must be studied by all pupils.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have had surpluses in excess of £1 million in (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92; and if he will list them.

Mr. McLoughlin: Training and enterprise councils may earn surpluses by the effective use of some of the funds made available to them by the Department, to meet their needs for adequate reserves for their day-to-day commitments as companies, to finance any advances in funding they make to their training providers and to reinvest in local training, education and enterprise activities. Under their contracts, they can use their surpluses only on activities agreed with the Department to further the objectives in their plans. The surpluses held by each TEC for both 1990-91 and 1991-92 may be seen in their published accounts, which are available in the Library.

Health and Safety

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how she intends to continue funding of health and safety training by trade unions and for workers' representatives.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State announced in December, the current public subsidy for the training of trade union officials will be phased out over a three-year period from April. We will, however, be providing some additional funds to the Health and Safety Commission for health and safety training initiatives.

WALES

Police Areas

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the resident population of each police force area in Wales in 1981 and 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: The mid-year estimates of resident population for the police force areas of Wales for 1981 and 1991 are shown in the table.

	1981 Thousands	1991[1] Thousands
North Wales	624·9	653·8
Gwent	441·7	446·9
South Wales	1,302·7	1,316·1
Dyfed-Powys	444·2	469·5

Source: Registrar General's Mid Year Estimate of Resident Population.

[1] 1991 data are provisional.

Access Funds

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been made by students to each of the access funds within each university, college and college of higher education in Wales in each year since the establishment of the funds.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since the access funds were established in 1990-91, the Universities Funding Council has been responsible for distributing access funds to the colleges of the university of Wales. The Welsh Office has distributed access funds to the other further and higher —FHE—institutions in Wales.

Institutions do not usually distinguish between the three access funds when considering applications. According to returns from FHE institutions in Wales a total of 3,160 students applied for assistance from the access funds in 1990-91 and 3,932 in 1991-92. Similar information for 1992-93 will not be available until later in the year.

Wilprint Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he received requests from the fraud squad for files relating to the placing of printing and publicity contracts with the Wilprint Group; and on whether that request was complied with.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department always co-operates fully with the police.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many housing units have developed by Tai Cymru in areas with a population of under 3,000 in each of the last three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

Local Authority Reserves

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the level of reserves, excluding capital receipts, held by each local authority in Wales in each year from 1990 onwards; and if he will publish estimated reserve levels, excluding capital receipts, for the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: The information available is shown in table 8.9 of "Welsh Local Government Financial Statistics 1992", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. This includes estimated reserves at 31 March 1993.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to paragraph 9.13 of the Welsh Office report, "Government Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96", Cm. 2215, on what date he estimates the quinquennial review of the aims and objectives of the Cardiff Bay development corporation will (a) commence and (b) be completed; what external consultancy assistance will be sought and by what means, to assist in the review; what the total cost of the review is estimated to be, inclusive of any such consultancy assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I expect the financial management and policy review of the Cardiff bay development to begin around the end of the financial year and to take approximately three months to complete. Such reviews are normally conducted by a Welsh Office official assigned to the project for its duration. On that basis, I estimate the cost to be about £14,000.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to figure 3.09 of the Welsh Office report, "Government Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96", Cm. 2215, when he expects to set the target rate of return on the Welsh Development Agency for its investment function in 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: I expect to agree a provisional financial duty shortly and to determine a final financial duty for 1993-94 later this year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to paragraph 3.16 of the Welsh Office report, "Government Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96", Cm. 2215, what consultations he has had with the Welsh Development Agency concerning the sale of all or any of the Treforest, Bridgend, Waterton Forestfach or Wrexham industrial estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The departmental report clearly sets out the Government's policy on planned disposals. Decisions on which properties to bring forward are for the Welsh Development Agency.

NHS Trusts

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) health authority members and (b) members of boards of national health service trusts are elected members of principal local authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Seven health authority members and two national health service trust non-executive directors were elected members of a principal local authority in Wales at the time of their appointment. Since local authorities are not required to notify the Department about changes to their membership, the Welsh Office does not have a record of changes in elected member status for these or other health authority members and trust non-executive directors following appointment.

Health Promotion

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to paragraph 9.08 of the Welsh Office report, "Government Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96, Cm.

2215", if he will place a copy in the Library of the October 1992 report on health promotion and the subsequent action plan.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The action plan is still under consideration. Publication of the scrutiny report and the Welsh Office's response will be addressed when that consideration is complete.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many members of TECs are elected members of principal local authorities.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information as to whether members of TECs are also elected members of local authorities is not collected centrally.

A465

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when contracts will be signed for construction work to begin on the A465 link between Aberdulais and Glynneath.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The contract will be let shortly before main works start. This is planned for 1993-94 and is contingent on expenditure on other schemes in the roads programme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Management Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) K.P.M.G. management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Curry: Consultancy fees totalling £304,082 were paid to Coopers and Lybrand, Touche Ross, Price Waterhouse, and KPMG, for the financial year 1991-92. A further breakdown of figures cannot be given as this information is classified commercial in confidence. These consultancy firms were involved in six areas of work in my core-department. This answer excludes contracts made for information technology work and those made by executive agencies. The precise number of contracts, and information for the last 12 months, can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the number and percentage of cereal farmers in each EC member state who will have to place land in set-aside.

Mr. Curry: The information in the following table is derived from budgetary estimates of expenditure on the CAP reform package prepared by the Commission. The estimates do not distinguish between cereals farmers and those growing oilseeds or protein crops, both of which are also covered by the arable area payments scheme.

Country	Number of growers expected to set land aside	Percentage of growers expected to set land aside
Belgium	7,644	16
Denmark	37,770	46
Germany	105,474	21
Greece	4,378	1
Spain	58,169	8
France	202,744	34
Ireland	6,285	15
Italy	34,210	3
Luxembourg	256	10
Netherlands	6,068	26
Portugal	2,349	1
United Kingdom	50,363	63
Total	515,710	12

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the likely acreage for set-aside for cereal land in each EC member state under the common agricultural policy reform proposals.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 14 December 1992 at column 70. That information was derived from Commission estimates which do not distinguish between land used to grow cereals and land used for other arable crops eligible for the new arable area payments.

Consultancies

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Curry: During the financial year 1991-92 contracts were awarded by my core-department to consultancy firms involved in ten areas of work. This answer excludes contracts made for information technology consultancies and those made by executive agencies. The precise number of contracts, and information for the last 12 months, can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the impact on the sheep annual premium of a change in the pound sterling/ecu exchange rate to £ = 1·25 ecu.

Mr. Curry: The final rate of sheep annual premium in respect of 1992 is calculated according to the green exchange rate in force on 3 January 1993. It will not be affected by changes in the pound sterling/ecu exchange rate subsequent to that date.

The rate of premium for future years will depend on the level of market prices and green rates operating in each member state throughout the year. The pound sterling/ecu exchange rate is therefore only one factor affecting the level of premium payable in the United Kingdom, and its impact cannot be assessed independently of the others.

Bee Diseases

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his actions to alleviate bee diseases.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 19 February 1993]: Since my reply to the Member for Linlithgow on 5 November at columns 405-06, a further 33 cases of varroasis have been confirmed, all within the infected area, making a total of 318. I have arranged for letters to be sent to every beekeeper known to the Department to ensure that each is aware of the varroa controls and the advice that is available. I have also arranged for a further varroa search to take place in the spring. Until then existing controls will be maintained. Further action will depend on the results of the search. We shall also continue to take the necessary action to tackle other bee diseases including American foul brood and European foul brood.

Veterinary Science

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what Government funding is made available annually towards the cost of the training course for veterinary science.

Mr. Boswell: I have been asked to reply.

Funding for veterinary schools is the responsibility of the Universities Funding Council. The UFC's teaching unit of resource for veterinary science for the academic year 1992-93 is £9,589. The UFC is funding some 1,800 undergraduate places.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels 12 m long and under are registered in the United Kingdom; and what is their total horse power.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

There are 9,153 fishing vessels of 12 m or less; total horse power is 697,237.

DEFENCE

Drugs

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 373-4, if he will list the drugs involved in each case of discharge from the services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The drugs involved in dismissals following court martial or summary proceedings are as follows:

Class of Drug	Numbers Discharged
	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Class A
Importing	—	—	1	—	—	—

Possessing	—	—	—	—	—	—
Toxic Substances:	—	2	2	—	6	6
Total Offenders:	60	57	68	68	121	170

Notes:

1. Class A drugs include heroin, opium, morphine, cocaine, pethidine, other narcotic drugs, LSD and certain other injectable amphetamines and hallucinogens.

Class B drugs include other narcotics, cannabis, cannabis resin and amphetamines.

Class C drugs include a number of amphetamine-like drugs.

Toxic material includes glue, lighter fuel and other inhaled hallucinogenic substances.

Information in respect of the types of drugs involved in cases of administrative discharge is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In my answer of 5 February, columns 373-74, the figures shown for dismissal related solely to those instances where an offender's most serious offence was either importing, possessing, or supplying drugs. The figures provided in today's answer also include those convicted of a more serious offence of violence in addition to a drugs charge and are therefore slightly higher than the figures previously provided.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, columns 373-74, what were the ranks of all those discharged from the services for drugs-related offences.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The ranks of those dismissed for drugs offences following court martial or summary proceeding are as follows:

Rank	Year
	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991

TOTAL	60	57	68	68	121	170

Information on the rank of those administratively discharged for drug offences is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In my answer of 5 February, the figures shown for dismissal related solely to those instances where an offender's most serious offence was either importing, possessing or supplying drugs. The figures provided in today's answer also include those convicted of a more serious offence of violence in addition to a drugs charge and are therefore slightly higher than the figures previously provided.

Absence Without Leave

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of the various branches of the armed forces towards punishment of service men and women who are absent without leave.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Absence without leave is an offence under the service discipline Acts and is punishable by up to two years' imprisonment. It is regarded as a serious offence as it can undermine the operational effectiveness of a unit and the morale of other personnel. Punishments awarded vary according to the circumstances of individual cases.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) for which of its services to the public the Meteorological Office charges a fee directly to the user; (2) what income the Meteorological Office has generated from answering public inquiries about the United Kingdom inshore water forecast in each year since it began charging for the service.

Mr. Aitken: These are matters delegated to the Meteorological Office under the terms of the framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply directly to the hon. Member.

Letter from Professor Julian Hunt to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 22 February 1993:

Dear Mr. Ainger

I am responding to your two written Parliamentary Questions.

(1) To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, for which of its services to the public the Meterological Office charges a fee directly to the user.

The Met Office provides services to the public in a variety of ways. Some services, such as severe weather warnings and a range of basic forecast scripts, are provided free of charge to the broadcasting media. Other television, radio and newspaper services (the majority) are provided on a commercial basis to the media companies, but are received by the user—the public—at no direct cost.

Only services offered directly to the public are charged directly. For example, Weathercall is a premium-rated telephone service run jointly by the Met Office and a private firm. Through its network of Weather Centres the Met Office provides weather forecasts for each of 27 areas around the UK, updated three times a day. Revenue from the calls is shared between the line provider (normally British Telecom) and the service providers.

A similar service, called Marinecall, is provided for leisure yachtsmen, giving weather forecasts for 15 inshore areas and two sea areas around the United Kingdom. Services for mountain walkers, skiers and holiday makers (Mountaincall, Skicall and International Weathercall respectively) are also offered.

Over the past year, the Met Office has extended the premium-rated approach to dial-in fax services. MetFAX offers a range of products, designed for yachtsmen, general aviation and schools. A version for the general public, corresponding to Weathercall, is planned for later this year.

Finally, the public can make use of special telephone numbers at Weather Centres and speak directly to forecasters, for which a subscription charge and a charge per call is made. However this service, together with a large range of more tailored services, is aimed more at specific markets, such as agriculture, building and the offshore industry, rather than the general public.

(2) To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what income the Meteorological Office has generated from answering public enquiries about the United Kingdom inshore weather forecast in each year since it began charging for the service.

The Met Office provides an inshore waters forecast for the United Kingdom twice daily to the BBC free of charge as part of the Office's Public Meteorological Service. The forecasts are broadcast on Radio 3 in the morning and Radio 4 in the evening.

In addition, a premium-rated telephone service (Marinecall) is available. The Marinecall service comprises 15 inshore areas, a national UK inshore and two sea area forecasts (for the English Channel and the southern North Sea). Forecasts are updated twice daily from our network of Weather Centres—for example the forecasts for St. David's Head to Hartland Point and for St. David's Head to Colwyn Bay are provided from Cardiff Weather Centre.

The service began in 1986, earning revenue as follows:

1986-87	32,000
1987-88	82,000
1988-89	128,000
1989-90	213,000
1990-91	242,000
1991-92	240,000
[1]1992-93	194,000

---

[1] 10 months to date.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with his American counterpart with regard the maximum number of warheads to be carried by each British Trident submarine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of warheads carried by a British Trident submarine is a matter for Her Majesty's Government. We have long made clear that each submarine will enter service carrying no more than 128 warheads. The exact number to be deployed will be decided in the light of the circumstances at the time.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the first flight of the European fighter aircraft to take place; in what country it is to occur; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The first flight of Eurofighter 2000 is expected this year. The contractor's programme envisages that a German-assembled prototype will be the first to fly, followed shortly after by a second aircraft in the United Kingdom.

The activities leading to first flight have been somewhat delayed by the programme review commissioned last year and the changes introduced as a result of decisions taken at the quadripartite ministerial meeting on 10 December 1992. A number of technical issues—none of them of a serious nature—remain to be resolved, including qualifications of the flight control system software—which is critical to flight safety—and which is taking longer than originally expected. The precise timing of first flight is a matter for the manufacturers to decide when they judge sufficient development progress has been made to allow flight testing to proceed safely.

Vessel Hulls

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) for what classes of vessel his Department allows tenderers to respond on the basis of non-United Kingdom built hulls;

(2) on how many occasions and for what classes of vessel tenderers to his Department have responded on the basis of non-United Kingdom built hulls.

Mr. Aitken: Apart from the conversion of existing merchant shipping to meet certain specialist requirements, the only occasion on which tenderers were permitted to respond on the basis of non-United Kingdom built hulls was for the competition for single role mine hunters, cancelled in 1991.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what opportunities exist under the Independent European Programme Group/Western European Union arrangements for United Kingdom warship builders to bid to supply hulls for other European navies;

(2) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the Independent European Programme Group/Western European Union arrangements for reciprocal purchasing in the field of warship hulls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The nations of the Independent European Programme Group which now all participate in the WEU, are under no obligation to include warship hulls in the arrangements agreed in the IEPG to open the European defence equipment market.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the extent to which United Kingdom shipbuilders have been invited to tender to supply hulls to the navies of (a) France, (b) the Netherlands, (c) Belgium, (d) Italy and (e) Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I am not aware that any such invitations have recently been received from any of the countries listed.

Warships

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the proportion of warship building capacity which is state owned in (a) France, (b) the Netherlands, (c) Belgium, (d) Italy and (e) Germany; and what effect this has on reciprocal purchasing arrangements.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) on 17 February, Official Report, column 254.

Fatal Accidents

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider making it the practice of Her Majesty's Government to make publicly available the conclusions and recommendations of service boards of inquiry reports investigating fatal accidents subject to the agreement of the next of kin of the deceased and the minimum of security requirements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 19 February 1993]: Service board of inquiry reports are internal documents written for internal use by the service concerned. Their conclusions and recommendations may refer to failings on the part not only of the deceased, but also of other named, or identifiable, service personnel or service units involved. While this is no longer considered sufficient justification for withholding reports from the next of kin of the deceased, it does render the material inappropriate for routine publication by the Ministry of Defence.

HEALTH

Drug Prescribing

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that the proposals to extend the selected list regulations to 10 therapeutic categories will not be implemented until after the two joint working groups set up by her Department with the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry to (a) to examine the factors contributing to the rate of growth of NHS expenditure on drugs and (b) to consider the future development of the pharmaceutical industry in the United Kingdom and its contribution to the national economy have had the opportunity to make initial recommendations to her.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

NHS Staff (Medical Screening)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the responsibilities transferred by statutory instrument from the former medical officers of health to the health authorities on the occasions of health and local government reorganisation in respect of medical screening and examinations of local authority staff and applicants; and which such services are provided free of charge.

Dr. Mawhinney: The exact responsibilities of the national health service for providing services to local authorities are not set out in statute. They are covered in general terms by the requirement in section 22 of the National Health Service Act 1977 that health and local authorities must co-operate in order to secure and advance the health and welfare of their residents, and also in general guidance issued by the Department.

NHS Low Income Scheme

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the outcome of the review of the national health service low income scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on Tuesday 15 December at column 184. I hope to make an announcement soon.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, (1) pursuant to her answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 321, what evidence she possesses that the selected list scheme continues to exert a downward pressure on the national health service drugs bill; and in what year it was obtained;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 321, what are the grounds for her belief that measures under the selected list scheme continue to exert a downward pressure on the drugs bill.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Advisory Committee on National Health Service drugs is required to ensure that drugs to meet all real clinical needs in the specified categories can be provided as economically as possible under the NHS. In considering whether to recommend that a particular product should not be prescribed under the NHS, the committee will have regard both to its cost and to the cost of alternative products which are likely to be prescribed in its place. This ensures that the net effect of the committee's recommendations will be to exert a continuing downward pressure on the NHS drugs bill.

Anti-ulcer Products

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what degree doctors began prescribing the more expensive anti-ulcer products as an alternative after the selected list scheme was introduced and applied to antacid products in 1985; and if her Department has assessed the total costs to the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: Such an estimate, whether relating to the volume or cost of prescriptions, could not be made as information about diagnosis is not included on prescription forms.

Cholera

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many instances of cholera in the United Kingdom by region, have been reported in each year since 1988.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table.

The data provided are for England and Wales only. The information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Juvenile Offenders (Secure Places)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she intends to privatise secure accommodation for young people.

Mr. Yeo: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial assistance she proposes to give to local authorities for the staffing and running costs of secure places provided by them so that juvenile offenders are not sent to prison; from what sources such assistance will be provided; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Financial assistance for the staffing and running costs of additional secure places managed by local authorities will be considered in the appropriate public expenditure surveys. Consideration will be given to seeking a transfer of part of the resources from the Home Office when the courts have power to direct remanded juveniles to secure accommodation.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 319, what representations she has received that the proposed number of additional secure places for juvenile offenders is insufficient; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: A number of representations have been received from local authorities. We are satisfied that the estimate is based on the best possible information currently available. The position will be kept under review.

Dysentery

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many instances of dysentery have been reported by region in the United Kingdom in each year since 1988.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table.

The data provided are for England and Wales only. The information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Corporate Affairs Intelligence Unit

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the main duties and responsibilities of the corporate affairs intelligence unit, NHS ME, based in Leeds; how many people are employed there full-time and part-time; what is the budget for 1993 and estimated budget for each of the next three years; what funding comes from departmental budgets other than her own; and if she will make a statement;

(2) when the corporate affairs intelligence unit, NHS ME in Leeds was established; what consultants and advisers it has used since it was established and what is the total cost of such retention; what is the total cost of entertainment, travel and other facilities to journalists and others since it was established; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The corporate affairs intelligence unit was established on 30 September 1991. Its duties, which were previously undertaken by the Department's regional liaison division, include the preparation of draft replies for Ministers and the national health service management executive on matters concerning the NHS that are not appropriate for referral to NHS authorities and trusts, and the preparation of briefing for parliamentary questions, early-day motions, invitations, etc. It supports Ministers and the management executive in their contact with the NHS in each region. The unit is also responsible for advising Ministers on the appointment of chairmen and members of NHS authorities and trusts.

On 1 February 1993, there were 53 full-time staff in the unit, and three temporary typists. The unit has a manpower budget of about £1 million for 1993-94, the same as that for 1992-93; estimates have not been prepared for future years. All funding comes from Department of Health budgets.

Since its inception, the unit has received advice and guidance from a number of sources including the Department's information division. PA Consulting Group assisted with setting up and running a number of training workshops for the unit staff. The value of the contract with PA Consulting Group is commercially confidential.

The unit is staffed by civil servants, none of whom is authorised to speak to journalists, and does not provide entertainment, travel or other facilities to them. The unit has a hospitality budget of some £1,800 which is used, in the main, to provide refreshments to people from outside the Department attending meetings with the unit.

North East Trust Zone

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the main duties and responsibilities of the north east trust zone, based in Leeds; how many people are employed there full-time and part-time; what is the budget for 1993 and estimated budget for each of the next three years; which part of her Departmental budget supplies the funding; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service management executive north east outpost is one of six outposts established by the management executive to monitor the performance of NHS trusts. The outpost has responsibility for monitoring NHS trusts within the geographical area covered by the Northern, Yorkshire and Trent regional health authorities. Within the zone there are 31 trusts established as part of the first and second waves and 40 units which will become trusts on 1 April 1993 as part of the third wave. In addition 35 applications are currently being considered from units that wish to become trusts as part of the fourth wave.

The main responsibilities of the outpost are as follows:

Monitoring trusts' financial performance against statutory financial duties;

Reviewing trusts' strategic direction and annual business plans;

Appraising trusts' business cases for capital investment;

Monitoring trusts' annual reports and accounts;

Leading the assessment process for fourth wave trusts;

Providing a channel of communication between trusts and the Management Executive.

The outpost has eight staff, all of whom are full-time. The budget for 1993-94 is £650,000. We expect the budget to reflect inflation in each of the next three years. Funding has been provided from within existing regional health authority allocations.

Hospitals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 604, if she will list those hospitals, in each region that have been notified to her Department as experiencing problems managing their resources to cope with admissions levels.

Mr. Sackville: There is no formal requirement on hospitals to send such a notification to the Department. It is for individual health authorities and trusts to manage their resources and to make arrangements for non-emergency admissions to hospitals when admissions are running at a particularly high level.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 February, Offical Report, column 828, if she will place copies of the financial accounts from all first wave self-governing trusts in the Library.

Dr. Mawhinney: The financial accounts information supplied by first wave trusts for 1991-92 is summarised by the Department and presented to Parliament by the Comptroller and Auditor General when he has completed his audit. The summarised accounts will be published as a House of Commons paper copies of which are placed in the Library. Full copies of the accounts of individual trusts are in the public domain and can be obtained locally.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what charge per day per patient is made by secure units for the mentally ill in Yorkshire in (a) self-governing trusts and (b) other hospitals.

Mr. Yeo: Information on the charges made by secure units to national health service purchasers in respect of normal referrals is not held centrally. Details of daily charges are collected for patients admitted as extra contractual referrals. The latest figures available are for financial year 1991-92 and are as follows:

	£ per day
Newton Lodge medium secure unit (Wakefield)	198
De La Pole Hospital interim secure unit (Hull)	191
High Royds Hospital interim secure unit (Ilkley)	100

72. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations have been received from Yorkshire regional health authority over the past five years about a secure unit for those suffering from mental illness.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 February.

Lynfield Mount Hospital

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will arrange for each response to the consultation carried out concerning a proposal to establish a special care unit at Lynfield Mount hospital, Bradford, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Yeo: The individual responses will be available at Bradford health authority's headquarters.

Mifepristone/RU486

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the drug Mifepristone/RU486; what guidance she has issued on its use; and what plans she has to review its usage.

Mr. Sackville: Mifegyne (mifepristone; RU486) was granted a licence in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968 on advice from the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM), an independent drug safety committee established under the Act. Following a thorough evaluation of the available data from pre-clinical studies, clinical trials and usage in other countries, both the CSM and the licensing authority were satisfied as to the safety, quality and efficacy of the drug.

The use of Mifegyne for the termination of pregnancy is subject to the Abortion Act 1967 (as amended). Guidance to doctors on its usage is contained in the data sheet and information for patients is given in the patient information Leaflet. These documents were approved by both the CSM and the licensing authority.

As with all marketed drugs, information on the safety of RU486 is collected and investigated by the CSM. The safety, quality and efficacy of RU486 are taken into consideration during reviews of its usage.

Ambulances (Emergency Calls)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) for each ambulance authority in England and (b) for the financial year 1991-92 and each off the first two quarters of 1992-93 (i) the total number of emergency calls, (ii) the percentage of emergency calls which were reached within 14 minutes in urban areas and (iii) the percentage of emergency calls which were reached within 19 minutes in rural areas.

Mr. Sackville: Information for 1992-93 is not yet available. Final figures for 1991-92 are given in the table.

Censuses

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of residents of England and Wales are estimated to have been missed by each census since 1971, taking account of any follow-up surveys.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 17 February 1993]: Results of the 1981 census post enumeration survey indicated a net undercount of about 0·4 per cent. of people present in private households. This degree of under-enumeration was of the same magnitude as that indicated by the coverage checks following the census of 1971.

The 1981 census did not attempt to enumerate residents of households wholly absent on census night (except as visitors if they were elsewhere in the country). Taking this into account, the total under-coverage of residents in most census statistical tables was about 2·2 per cent. Allowing for residents in wholy absent households who were enumerated as visitors elsewhere in the country (1·3 per cent.), the proportion of residents not counted in the census was 0·9 per cent.

Unlike the earlier censuses, the 1991 census sought to enumerate residents of households wholly absent on census night, either by obtaining the information when people returned to their home address or by imputation, so the analyses of under-enumeration are not directly comparable. The 1991 census validation survey identified sources of error which indicated that about 0·6 per cent. of residents in households had not been counted. From other sources, it is estimated that a further 1·3 per cent. of the resident population was missed for reasons not identified by this survey, giving a total of 1·9 per cent.

Further details for the 1981 and 1991 censuses are given in annex A to the 1991 "Census National Monitor for Great Britain", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of infants aged under one year she estimates were missed by the census in (a) inner London, (b) outer London, (c) metropolitan districts, (d) urban non-metropolitan districts and (e) other non-metropolitan districts in England and Wales.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The estimated proportions of infants aged under one year missed by the 1991 census were 8·8 per cent. in inner London, 4·1 per cent. in outer London, 3·7 per cent. in metropolitan districts outside London, 2·9 per cent. in non-metropolitan cities, and 1·9 per cent. in other non-metropolitan districts (3·0 per cent. in England and Wales as a whole). Appropriate allowances for these people have been made in compiling the provisional rebased 1991 population estimates.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will conduct a thorough review of the geographical distribution of census undercount for the final mid 1991 population estimates; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is currently carrying out further geographical analyses of results from the census validation survey, and also of other factors that contributed to the provisional set of mid-1991 population estimates. The outcome of these investigations will be reported in conjuction with the final mid 1991 population estimates, to be published in June 1993.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Rent Deposit Scheme

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1992 Official Report, columns 155-56, what conclusions he has drawn from the pilot rent deposit scheme in West London.

Mr. Scott: I am advised by the Department of Environment that the pilot project for a rent deposit fund operated by the Notting Hill Housing Trust is due to end on 30 June 1993. We await the evaluation of this project with interest.

Departmental Report

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide the figures used in constructing figure 10 in the social security departmental report published in February, together with equivalent figures for each year from 1970-71.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested for years before 1974-75. The available information is in the tables.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of (a) disability living allowance reviews and (b) attendance allowance reviews that have been disallowed to date by whether the original award was for the higher, middle or lower rate in the case of disability allowance and higher or lower in the case of attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary fo State for Social Security how many (a) disability living allowance awards and (b) attendance allowance awards were made between February and December 1992, nationally and by disability benefit centre; and if he will provide a breakdown of these by higher, middle or lower rate.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the tables.

Notes:

1. Unrounded figures have been used previously in PQs for DBCs.
2. Monthly figures on AA only available from May 1992 and do not break-down nil awards into higher and lower rates.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number and percentage of disability working allowance claims that were renewed after the first six months and the number and percentage that were not renewed either because a request for renewal was not submitted or because the applicant did not fulfil the conditions of entitlement; and if he will provide a breakdown of claimants refused benefit at renewal stage on the grounds of failing to meet the disability conditions, the income test, the qualifying benefit conditions or other reasons.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to say how many claims were not renewed at any one time because there is an eight-week period around the time the disability working allowance award expires in which a person can make a renewal claim. However, an analysis of the 1,502 awards made by 31 July 1992 shows that by the end of January 1993, 1,073 (71·4 per cent.) of these recipients had been given a second award. This figure is likely to increase when late claims are decided.

By 29 January the number of renewal claims refused in each category was as follows:

Reason for refusal	Number of renewal claims refused
Failure to meet the disability test	21
Failure to meet the income test	126
No qualifying benefit	8
Other reasons	85

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number and percentage of requests for reviews of (a) disability living allowance and (b) attendance allowance that remain outstanding.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

	Total number of reviews received	Reviews outstanding at end of January 1993	Percentage of reviews outstanding
Disability living allowance February 1992-January 1993	67,953	53,681	79
Attendance allowance April 1992-January 1993	109,428	28,812	26

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to produce written information to claimants about their right to ask for a review of departmental decisions not to award compensation in respect of disability living allowance claims.

Mr. Scott: Payments to compensate someone for the lost use of benefit are made on an exgratia basis and there is no right of appeal against these decisions.

However, any customer who believes that they meet the criteria for the award of a compensatory payment and who has had a payment refused may ask the DLA unit if the decision can be looked at again. (The criteria are that the delay has been at least 12 months for new claims or three for renewal claims; the arrears due are more than £50; and there has been clear departmental error which resulted in the delay).

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total expenditure of his Department on payments of disability living allowance and attendance allowance since the beginning of April 1992, excluding administrative costs; and if he will provide the total expenditure on mobility and attendance allowance for the same period in the previous year.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. However, spending on mobility allowance and attendance allowance for the year 1991-92 together with the estimated spending for disability living allowance, residual mobility allowance and attendance allowance for the year 1992-93 is in the table:

	Actual spending 1991-92 (millions)	Estimated spending 1992-93 (millions)
Attendance allowance	1,706	1,458
Mobility allowance	1,062	125
Disability living allowance	—	1,905
Total	2,768	3,488

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to respond to (a) the recommendation in the Social Security Advisory Committee's eighth report relating to the severe disability premium and (b) the other recommendations.

Mr. Burt: We have, of course, taken careful note of the committee's recommendations, but we are under no obligation to make a formal response and have no plans to do so.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to reply to the application by Mr. Ernest Peel for his review of the mobility component of the disability living allowance which was sent to her Department on 2 July 1992.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Bob Cryer, dated 19 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about when he expects to reply to the application by Mr. Ernest Peel for his review of the mobility component of the disability living allowance which was sent to this Department on 2 July 1992.

A further decision has been given on Mr. Peel's Disability Living Allowance (DLA) mobility component claim and was notified to Mr. Peel on 9 February 1993. I understand that the Disability Living Allowance Unit has already replied to you separately and in greater detail about his matter on 12 February 1993.

The unfortunate delay in dealing with Mr. Peel's review application has resulted from heavy volumes of work following the successful launch of the new benefit. You will be aware from my letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs of the problems the Benefits Agency has faced since the launch of DLA and the positive steps being taken to improve the situation. Since then further steps have been taken to clear the current backlog of reviews. Measures taken include recruiting additional, and redeploying existing staff and the setting up of four additional processing units.

I offer my sincere apologies to Mr. Peel for the delay in dealing with his claim. He has clearly not received the standard of service that he has every right to expect from the Agency. Such matters are not taken lightly and measures are being taken to improve the quality of service for all our customers.

I hope that you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to reply to the application by Mr. K. J. Warring-Davies for a component of the disability living allowance following the medical examination which took place on 24 November 1992.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will writ to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Bob Cryer, dated 19 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about when he expects to reply to the application by Mr. K. J. Warring-Davies for a component of the disability living allowance following the medical examination which took place on 24th November 1992.

A decision has been given on Mr. Warring-Davies' Disability Living Allowance application and notified to him on 11 February 1993. I understand that the Disability Living Allowance Unit has already replied to you separately and in greater detail about this matter on 18 February 1992.

The unfortunate delay in dealing with Mr. Warring-Davies' application has resulted from the heavy volumes of work following the successful launch of the new benefit. You will be aware from my letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs of the problems the Benefits Agency has faced since the launch of DLA and the positive steps being taken to improve the situation. Since then further steps have been taken to clear the current backlog of reviews. Measures taken include recruiting additional, and redeploying existing, staff and the setting up of four additional processing units.

I apologise for the delay in dealing with Mr. Warring-Davies' case. Such matters are not taken lightly and measures are being taken to improve the quality of Service for all our customers.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultation he has undertaken to date with the Magistrates Association on the way to deal with persistent juvenile offenders aged between 12 and 15 years.

Mr. Jack: We intend to consult widely, including with the Magistrates Association, before bringing detailed legislative proposals before Parliament.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the maximum custodial sentence available to the courts for a persistent juvenile offender aged (a) 14 years or under and (b) 17 years in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1992.

Mr. Jack: There is no legal definition of a persistent juvenile offender. The information in the table therefore relates to the maximum lengths of custodial sentences available for all juvenile offenders subject to statutory criteria being met. The maximum length of custodial sentences, other than detention under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, for the relevant ages in the specified years are as follows:

Date	Sentence
1979
Under 14	No custodial sentence
14 year old (males)	Detention centre—6 months
17 year olds	Borstal training—2 years Imprisonment—maximum term was the same as a court could have imposed for the offence in the case of an adult
Up to 1 October 1992
Under 14	No custodial sentence
14 year old (males)	Detention in young offender institution—4 months
17 year olds	Detention in young offender institution—maximum term was the same as a court could have imposed for the offence in the case of an adult
After 1 October 1992
Under 14	No custodial sentence
14 year olds	No custodial sentence
17 year olds	Detention in a young offender institution —12 months

At all relevant times, section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 has permitted courts:

to impose long-term detention on 14 to 17-year-olds for any offence which carries a 14-year maximum sentence for adults; and,

to impose long-term detention on 10 to 13 year olds following their conviction for murder or manslaughter.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent re-assessment he has made of his Department's evidence to the Home Affairs Select Committee on the effect of custody in a penal setting on young offenders.

Mr. Jack: At the Committee's request, my Department is preparing a supplementary memorandum of evidence which will deal, inter alia, with the matter to which the hon. Member refers.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to bring forward firm proposals to tackle juvenile crime.

Mr. Jack: The Government have already introduced a wide range of measures which aim to prevent young people from committing crime. In the Criminal Justice Act 1991, which was implemented on 1 October 1992, we have recently strengthened the powers of the court in relation to defendants under the age of 18.

Both in absolute terms and as a proportion of all known offenders, the number of juvenile offenders has declined in recent years. But the Government are not complacent. We are currently working on additional measures which should enable the courts to deal more effectively with the small number of juveniles who persistently re-offend and for whom existing measures appear not to be working. My right hon. and learned Friend will be announcing his proposals about this shortly.

Sentencing

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the restrictions on taking previous convictions into account when sentencing offenders.

Mr. Jack: The Criminal Justice Act 1991 introduced new provisions relating to previous convictions which reflected existing Court of Appeal guidance. It is too early yet to make a meaningful assessment of the effect of the Act, which came into force on 1 October 1992. However, we will be monitoring closely the effects of this new Act.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to revise upwards the minimum value of the sentencing unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The principle of the unit fine scheme, which applies to offences committed on or after 1 October 1992, is that fines should cause equal hardship for the well-off and less well-off by depriving an offender of a number of units of his disposable weekly income. One unit is intended to represent a third of the sum left to an offender after essential living expenses have been deducted from his take-home weekly income. For those with very low incomes, who have £12 a week or less after essential living expenses are deducted, there is normally a minimum unit value of £4.

The operation of the unit fine scheme is being carefully monitored. It is too early to say whether any aspect of it will need to be revised.

European Forum on Refugees

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on matters discussed and decisions taken at the European forum on refugees held in Budapest on 15 and 16 February.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend attended the European conference on uncontrolled migration in Budapest on 15 and 16 February, which approved a series of recommendations for tackling illegal immigration from and through central and eastern Europe. I have placed a copy of the agreed document in the Library of the House. The conference also agreed, among other things, that an informal working party drawn from a small group of participating states should be established to monitor implementation of the recommendations and in particular to carry forward work on promoting readmission agreements.

Football Grounds (Policing)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the chairman of Port Vale football club to discuss consistency and clarity in police charging policy for attending football matches.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received a request for such a meeting. Charges for policing football matches are a matter for the police authority concerned.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when and on what basis police charges were introduced for policing inside football league grounds.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Charging for additional police services is a long-standing principle, authorised by statutes going back at least to the 19th century. It is not known precisely when charging for policing football matches began, although the practice predated the Police Act 1964, section 15 of which provides the current authority for such charges.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the guidelines to ensure consistency and clarity in police charges for policing league football matches.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A guidance circular on the subject was issued to all police authorities and forces in May 1991. That guidance recommended a basis for calculating police costs suggested by the Audit Commission and one of its main aims was to promote the consistency of practice recommended by Lord Justice Taylor.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the cost per spectator of policing football matches for each team in the second division.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Gloucestershire Constabulary

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of whether the level of the Gloucestershire constabulary's establishment takes sufficient account of the residence of members of the royal family in the county of Gloucestershire; and if he will make a statement on the criteria used in making his assessment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is for the chief constable to assess the level of officers needed to police royal residences in Gloucestershire. My right hon. and learned Friend looks to Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary for advice when considering applications for increases in police establishments. That advice takes account of any protection responsibilities which a force may have.

Immigration Detention Centres

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) at which United Kingdom airports and sea ports his Department is extending current immigration detention facilities;

(2) what plans his Department has for detention centres to house detainees under the Immigration Act 1971; and what construction is currently taking place.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A vacant prison service establishment at Campsfield house, Kidlington, near Oxford will be redeveloped during 1993 to provide at least 120 additional places for Immigration Act detainees. Other possible sites, including sites close to Heathrow and Gatwick airports, are under consideration, but no final decision has yet been taken.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all detention centres or prisons in the United Kingdom in which people are currently detained under the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In addition to immigration service places of detention at Harmondsworth, the Queen's building at Heathrow, the Beehive at Gatwick, Stansted airport and Manchester airport, the following prison establishments currently hold persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971:

Northern Ireland (as at 18 February 1993)
Crumlin Road

Scotland (as at 18 February 1993)
Gateside
Barlinnie
Craiginches
Saughton

England and Wales (as at 31 December 1992)
Bedford
Belmarsh
Birmingham
Brixton
Dorchester
Durham
Exeter
Gloucester
Haslar
Holloway
Holme House
Leeds
Leicester
Lewes
Lincoln
Pentonville
Woodhill
Wormwood Scrubs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently detained under the Immigration Act 1971; and what was the total number of people detained in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) for the first month of the current year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is not available in the form requested, but on 18 February there were 558 people detained under the Immigration Act 1971, including those detained temporarily in police cells. The total number of such people initially detained during 1992 and January 1993 was as shown in the table. Equivalent figures are not available for 1990 or 1991.

Initially detained	Number
In 1992	[1]6,413
In January 1993	[1]510

[1] These figures exclude those detained at ports of entry who did not claim asylum and who were detained for fewer than seven days. Records of such cases are not kept centrally.

Relate

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial support he will give to enable Relate to evaluate the effectiveness of its work in preventing marital breakdowns and in reducing the damaging consequences therefrom.

Mr. Jack: I have recently offered Relate a sum of £33,000 towards the cost of extending the evaluative work so far undertaken.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 406, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: (a) The current outturn estimate for 1992-93 is £12,395; (b) The proposed publicity budget for 1993-94 is £8,962.

Unemployed Offenders

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders appearing before the courts in Wolverhampton was unemployed in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 15 January 1993, Official Report, column 826.

Fraud Trials

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider the recommendations of the Roskill report about fraud trials following the conclusion of the case of R. v. Ward.

Mr. Jack: The Government have already accepted and implemented most of the recommendations of the Roskill report, in the Criminal Justice Acts of 1987 and 1988.

Nevertheless, in the light of continuing concern about length and expense of some trials, on 3 December 1992, the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Home Office and the legal secretariat to the Law Officers issued a consultation paper seeking views on a number of proposals for the reform of practice and procedure in long criminal trials, particularly those involving fraud. The consultation paper asks for responses by 28 February 1993.

Any further reforms in this area will also need to take account of relevant conclusions or recommendations from the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice, which is due to report later this year.

Prison Staff (Assaults)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults, major and minor, on prison staff have taken place at each prison establishment in England and Wales between April 1992 and February 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information relates to offences of assault on prison officers, or other members of staff, which were punished under the prison discipline system and is given in the table. Data for offences punished in January and February are not yet available.

Offences[1] of assaulting a member of Prison Service staff[2] proved at adjudications in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales in April to December 1992: by establishment at which punished.

Wolds Prison (Escape)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the circumstances which led to the escape of an inmate from the Wolds prison on 23 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prisoner was unaccounted for at a routine security check at 17.00 on 23 January. In accordance with standard procedures, the police were informed as soon as it was suspected that an inmate might be missing and an extensive search of the entire prison was undertaken, including roof spaces and roof tops. The prisoner appears to have used some items of women's clothing in order to leave in the guise of a female visitor. In this way he would avoid the security procedures to which all male visitors were subjected. The prisoner gave himself up to the prison two days later. An internal review of the incident and procedures has taken place and all the recommendations for immediate action to prevent a recurrence have been put in place. The Home Office deputy controller monitored the incident from the outset.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Details of the contracts awarded by my Department during the past 12 months and for 1991-92 to the specified companies are as follows:

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts for consultancies were awarded to his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of contracts for consultancies awarded by my Department for the last 12 months was 113 and for 1991-92 the number was 202.

Rule 43 Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were on rule 43 in prisons in (i) England and Wales, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Northern Ireland on 12 February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following table shows the number of males and females, both adults and young persons, removed from association under rule 43 of the prison rules and rule 46 of the young offender institution rules on 12 February, in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

	Rule 43/46 own protection	Rule 43/46 Good order and discipline	Total
Males	1,570	241	1,811
Females	22	7	29
Total	1,592	248	1,840

The table does not include inmates in designated vulnerable prisoner units where rule 43 and 46 restrictions do not apply.

Responsibility for prisons elsewhere in the United Kingdom rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Winchester Prison

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date X-ray and metal detection devices were installed at Winchester prison; and on what date they became fully operational.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: X-ray machines were delivered to Winchester on 1 May 1992 and 29 June 1992. One became operational on 20 October 1992. The second will be installed and brought into operation once the necessary alterations to the gate lodge building have been completed. These alterations are scheduled to commence in 1993-94.

A metal detector portal has been operational at Winchester since 1980.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to review the working of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and its effectiveness in deterring crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Criminal Justice Act which came into force on 1 October last year contained a range of provisions designed to establish a coherent sentencing framework based on the principle that the sentence should match the seriousness of the offence. The effects of the Act are being carefully monitored and evaluated as information becomes available.

Mr. Maurice Bland

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Maurice Bland will be transferred from Lindholme to an open prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Secretary of State has accepted the recommendation by a discretionary lifer panel of the Parole Board that Mr. Bland should be transferred to an open prison. A decision on the most suitable location for Mr. Bland will be made within the next few days and he will be moved as soon as possible thereafter.

Small Firms (Regulations)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all those regulations affecting small firms which have been abolished by his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Such statistics have never been assembled before. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is finalising a centralised record of Government regulations against which progress on deregulation will be monitored in future. The Home Office will contribute to this record.

Vehicle Clamping

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the immobilisation of vehicles improperly parked on private land.

Mr. Jack: The Government are today publishing a consultation document on wheel-clamping on private land in England and Wales. It describes the current legal position as we understand it and canvasses a number of options for tackling the problems which have been brought to our attention. It indicates no preference for any of the options listed, but rather solicits as wide a range of opinions as possible, so that a proper balance my be struck between the interests of the landowner and those of the motorist. The document also seeks information on the extent and nature of wheel-clamping on private property and the problems associated with it.

Copies of the paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and are being sent direct to right hon. and hon. Members, individuals and groups that have already expressed an interest, and to others with an identifiable interest in any of the options. Copies of the document may also be obtained free of charge by writing to C4 Division, Home Office, Room 339, 50 Queen Anne's gate, London SW1A 9AT.

The document requests that observations of both fact and opinion should reach the Home Office no later than the end of May.

WALES

Commons

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many areas are designated as commons in each local authority area of Wales; and what were the equivalent numbers in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1985 and (d) 1990.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is not held centrally. However, the project "The Common Lands of Wales", undertaken for the Countryside Commission by the rural surveys research unit at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth in 1988 indicated that the number of areas shown as common land in that year in each local authority area was:

County	Number of commons
Clwyd	323
Dyfed	488
Gwent	70
Gwynedd	279
Mid Glamorgan	53
Powys	290
South Glamorgan	24
West Glamorgan	67

At the time of the survey some of the areas may not have been finally registered or may have been subject to deregistration.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department (a) over the last 12 months and (b) in 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has awarded 88 consultancy contracts over the last 12 months and 75 in 1991-92.

One-stop Shops

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish a series of one-stop shops to advise and support local community initiatives in each of the current district council areas in the south Wales valleys.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A working group has been established to consider how to improve the delivery of enterprise and business support services across Wales. The group will report to the Department in May.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the estimated amounts to be collected in community charge within each local authority area in Wales for (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93; and what are the estimates for the collection of council tax in each local authority area in the first year of its operation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested for 1991-92 and 1992-93 is given in the following table. Comparable information is not available for 1993-94 since local authorities are still in the process of setting their budgets.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the estimated standard spending assessment levels for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 in each local authority area in Wales (i) prior to and (ii) following the announcement of capping criteria.

Mr. David Hunt: The standard spending assessment for 1992-93 for each local authority in Wales is shown in tables 1.3 and 1.6 of the Welsh Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (No. 4) (HC 241). Assessments for 1993-94 are shown in tables 1.3 and 1.6 of the Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1993-94 (HC 412). Copies of both reports are available in the Library of the House. Standard spending assessments are not altered by capping criteria.

Community Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to issue guidelines to (a) the private sector and (b) the voluntary sector concerning their involvement in community development work in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no plans to do so at present. The Welsh Office supports community development work through a variety of grant schemes; guidance to potential applicants is issued on each of these schemes.

County Council Assets

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the worth of assets in pounds sterling held by each county council in Wales in each year since 1988.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally.

National Curriculum

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what measures he proposes to improve work in the foundation subjects of the national curriculum;

(2) if he will make a statement on standards in the national curriculum in foundation subjects.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In its review of educational provision in Wales for 1991-92, HMI (Wales) reported that teachers have responded to the challenge of the national curriculum with resilience, personal effort and commitment. HMI found that in 1991-92—a year in which two of the foundation subjects were introduced for the first time—work in the core subjects was satisfactory or better in three quarters of classes and there was satisfactory work in the foundation subjects in two thirds of classes. I congratulate teachers on this substantial achievement. I am also naturally concerned by those classes where performance needs to improve. As teachers become more familiar with the requirements of the orders and planning appropriate schemes of work, I have every confidence that standards will improve further.

Reading Skills

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to improve the progressive development of reading skills.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The teaching of English under the national curriculum places considerable emphasis on the development of reading skills. There is already evidence of improvement. Last year's national curriculum tests for seven-year-olds showed a higher proportion of pupils had achieved level 2 or above—77 per cent.—in reading compared with the previous year—74 per cent. Level 2 is the level expected of a typical seven-year-old. In July last year I approved specific grant expenditure of £348,000 for innovative projects which are designed to improve primary reading standards in five local education authorities. The projects are being closely monitored and there will be a full evaluation in order that the gains can be passed to other LEAs in Wales.

Pharmacists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much his Department owes community pharmacists for periods of up to (a) 60 days and (b) 90 days;

(2) on how many occasions, and to what extent, in each year since 1990-91 community pharmacists received payment in respect of NHS pharmacy services within (a) 30 days, (b) 60 days or (c) 90 days of the provision of these services.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Pharmacists receive some 80 per cent. of their NHS fees and payments within a month of submitting the prescriptions they have dispensed to the prescription pricing division. The balance is paid a month later when the authority has calculated the exact payment due.

Anthrax

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of anthrax were treated in each of the health authorities in Wales in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There were no notifications of anthrax in Wales in the years 1980 to 1992. This information remains subject to verification for 1991 and 1992.

Hepatitis

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of hepatitis B were treated in each of the health authorities of Wales in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information available from hospital activity analysis data, given in the following table, relates to the number of discharges and deaths from NHS hospitals in each health authority with a recorded diagnosis of hepatitis B. These data relate only to cases for which patients were treated as in-patients or day cases in hospital. Most cases of hepatitis B, however, are managed in the community and do not involve an admission to hospital. Information on the number of cases managed in the community is not identifiable from centrally held data.

[1] The figures may understate the true position in that not all hospitals provide medical details relating to patient discharges and deaths. A patient admitted more than once in a year will be recorded each time he or she is admitted. Data for years after 1990 are not yet complete.

Rural Roads

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent on the maintenance of rural roads in Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Expenditure on the maintenance of roads is given in the following table. It is not possible to show separately spending relating to rural roads.

Current expenditure on roads maintenance

£ million

Financial Year	Local Authorities[1]	Central Government[2]
1979-80	62·9	6·5
1980-81	70·0	6·1

1991-92	n.a.	20·9

[1] Includes all highways and bridge maintenance, street cleaning for highways purposes, lighting and associated professional and technical services. Includes net expenditure incurred on behalf of other local authorities under agency agreements.

[2] Expenditure on trunk roads and motorways. Figures from 1979-80 to 1982-83 are estimates.

[3] A new definition of current expenditure was introduced in 1990-91 and this figure is not therefore strictly comparable to those for earlier years.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in the maintenance of rural roads in Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally.

EDUCATION

Business Names

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 51, (1) what steps he took, before approving the name Somerset University under the Business Names Act 1985, to satisfy himself that the degree-level courses provided met levels of educational quality recognised through validation by universities, the Council for National Academic Awards or other educational institutions;

(2) what consultations he had with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, or other educational interests, before approving the name Somerset University under the Business Names Act 1985;

(3) when he responded to the owner of the business wishing to trade under the name Somerset University under the Business Names Act 1985; what British educational bodies or public representatives supported the application; and if he will publish his response to the request from the owner.

Mr. Boswell: The President of the Board of Trade approves names under the Business Names Act 1985. The appropriate regulations, requiring consent under the Act, do not apply to names in use before 1 January 1983. Since there was evidence that "Somerset University" was in use before that date, the opinion of the Secretary of State for Education and Science was not sought.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 51, if he will list those business names, including either of the words university or polytechnic on the use of which his opinion is currently being sought.

Mr. Boswell: The opinion of my right hon. Friend is currently being sought on "Eastern International/Huron University, Inc." and "EIEA/Huron University, Inc." as the proposed business name of Lansdowne University Ltd., a South Dakota corporation.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 51, if he will publish his criteria for approving the use of the word university under the Business Names Act 1985.

Mr. Boswell: The President of the Board of Trade, who approves names under the Business Names Act 1985, consults the Privy Council where it is proposed that "university" is included in a business name. The Privy Council normally seeks the advice of my right hon. Friend, who is concerned to protect the status of United Kingdom universities and their interests and to avoid any confusion which might arise in the minds of the public.

Autism

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give an estimate of the number of children classified as autistic in the United Kingdom who attend schools run by (a) local education authorities and (b) voluntary or charitable organisations.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to him on 8 February, Official Report, column 454. Under the Education Act 1981 it is the responsibility of LEAs to identify and make provision for children with special educational needs, including those with autism. The Department for Education and the Department of Health are currently sponsoring a research project into the education and treatment of children with autism in England and Wales. The researchers, applying European prevalence rates to this country, estimate that there are in the region of 7,800 children with autism in England and Wales. Of these, approximately 1,000 children attend schools or units which specialise in teaching children with autism. About 400 specialist places are provided by the voluntary sector. I have today placed a copy of the report of stage 1 of the research in the Library.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the amount of resources and manpower that has been made available for the education and treatment of children with autism.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available centrally. It is the responsibility of LEAs and schools to ensure that individual autistic pupils receive the special education they require. The Department for Education and the Department of Health are currently sponsoring a research project into the education and treatment of children with autism in England and Wales. The second stage of the research aims to evaluate the main types of provision for young autistic children.

School Meals

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the local education authorities who have contracted out their school meals service to private companies; and what has been the change in employment as a result.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not collect this information. It is up to LEAs to decide whether they wish to delegate the funds for this service to schools. LEAs providing school meals directly are subject to the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988. A survey by the Local Government Management Board, published in November 1992, showed that local authorities' direct service organisations have won 91·6 per cent. by number of school catering contracts and 97·2 per cent. by value.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Key: (a) My Department, which was formed in April 1992, has funded 25 contracts for consultancies awarded in the last 12 months; its executive agency, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency, has awarded 29 contracts.

(b) As my Department was not in existence in 1991-92, this part of the question does not apply.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Key: (i) My Department which was formed in April 1992, has funded the following contracts in the past 12 months:

(a) Coopers and Lybrand Management Consultants: nil.

(b) Touche-Ross Management Consultants: two contracts have been awarded, one for a management review of the National Film and Television School and one for a market testing consultancy for catering operations at the British Film Institute. Total cost: £24,720.

(c) Price Waterhouse Management Consultants: two contracts have been awarded, one to look at financial systems and controls for the British Library St. Pancras project, and one to undertake an investment appraisal for my Department's headquarters project. Total cost: £120,000.

- (d) Ernst and Young Management Consultants: four contracts have been awarded; a report on market testing in the British Library, a feasibility study into the computerisation of the listing of historic buildings, which is ongoing, and two consultancies for the BFI, to look at computer facilities management and front-of house security at the National Film Theatre and Museum of the Moving Image. Total cost: £105,915.
- (e) Chrichton Roberts: nil.
- (f) KPMG Management Consultants: a contract was awarded to review British Screen Finance Ltd. Total cost: £38,000.
- (g) Leopold Management Consultants: nil.

(ii) As my Department was not in existence in 1991-92, this part of the question does not apply.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library an example of the contract signed by British Nuclear Fuels and its foreign customers for the reprocessing of irradiated spent fuel at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: No. The reprocessing contracts in question are a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc and its customers.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the Touche Ross report on the economic feasibility of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant commissioned by British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for the company.

Small Firms

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amount of funding his Department provided in each of the last three years for development work which aimed to benefit small firms and individual traders.

Mr. Leigh: The Department funded small firms development schemes at a cost of £89·3 million in 1990-91 and £90·8 million in 1991-92 with a forecast cost of £91·2 million for 1992-93.

Other small firms guarantee and support schemnes costing approximately £24·2 million in 1990-91, £34·4 million in 1991-92 and an expected £29·4 million in 1992-93 were, prior to their transfer to this Department in May 1992, funded by the Department of Employment.

The training and enterprise councils provide business counselling and advice to small businesses from funds provided by the Department of Employment. These TEC activities will be funded by this Department from 1993-94.

Misleading Prices

Mr. McFall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department intends to legislate against misleading price indications.

Mr. Leigh: Part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 makes it an offence to give a misleading price indication to consumers by any means.

Fridges

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the production of domestic fridges by United Kingdom manufacturers, for both national and overseas markets, from 1986 to 1991.

Mr. Sainsbury: Figures for United Kingdom manufacturers' production of domestic fridges are not available separately for the United Kingdom and overseas markets. Figures for manufacturers' sales of these items in total may be found in Business Monitor PAS3460 (Domestic Electrical Appliances), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Insolvencies

Ms. Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of (a) personal insolvencies and (b) company insolvencies in 1992 and in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The relevant information was published on my Department's behalf by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce in the 5 February issue of "Business Briefing", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who regulates insolvency practitioners in Britain.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Under the Insolvency Act 1986 only authorised persons may act as insolvency practitioners. Authorisation may be granted either by a professional body recognised by the Secretary of State or by the Secretary of State himself. The professional conduct of a person so authorised is regulated by the professional body or by the Secretary of State.

In addition, the insolvency legislation contains a number of provisions under which those interested in a particular insolvency may have control over the actions of an insolvency practitioner, including power to make application to court for relief where there is dissatisfaction with any act, omission or decision of the practitioner.

Company Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on which dates inspectors were appointed for investigation into Maxwell, BCCI, Polly Peck and Levitt Group of companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Apart from the inspections into the Maxwell companies in the early 1970s, the only appointment of inspectors in respect of the cases mentioned by the hon. Member is the appointment of inspectors announced on 8 June 1992 to investigate and report on the affairs and on the membership of Mirror Group Newspapers plc.

Auditor Regulation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will invite the public to submit evidence before completing his review of the auditor regulation regime introduced by part II of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I will bear in mind the hon. Member's suggestion.

Department of Trade Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what checks he makes on the fitness of individuals to act as inspectors for his Department before appointing such individuals.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department makes such checks as are necessary and takes all relevant information into account.

Auditing Practices Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department was first informed of the plans to form the Auditing Practices Board.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In November 1990.

Auditing Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will propose legislation under which the recognised supervisory bodies would be required to publish the names and addresses of all auditing firms whose standards are considered to be low.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Batteries

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will include reference to the possibility of recycling batteries by using chargers in his Department's planned consultation document on the safe disposal of batteries.

Mr. Eggar: Rechargeable batteries, or accumulators, are among those covered by directive 91/157/EEC—batteries and accumulators containing certain dangerous substances—the implementation of which will be the subject of public consultation by my Department in due course. The directive encourages the separate collection, for controlled disposal or recycling, of batteries and accumulators which contain specified amounts of lead, mercury and cadmium. Implementation of the directive in the Community has been delayed by the lack of an agreed marking system for batteries caught by the directive, but resolution of this matter is expected shortly, and a United Kingdom implementation date of 1 January 1994 for the directive is now planned.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many documents from Government Departments which have been asked for by the Scott inquiry have yet to be delivered.

Mr. Heseltine: The inquiry team has already received a great volume of documentation from Government Departments. It would be extremely difficult to quantify documents yet to be delivered since Departments are continuing to supply documents in response to ongoing requests from Lord Justice Scott.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has yet received from the Lord Justice Scott inquiry a timetable for oral evidence to the inquiry.

Mr. Heseltine: Lord Justice Scott has not yet announced dates for the taking of oral evidence. He has, however, made it clear that he wishes to report as soon as possible.

Vietnam

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Export Credits Guarantee Department's cover for Vietnam.

Mr. Needham: ECGD is willing to consider applications for insurance of United Kingdom investments in Vietnam. Medium-term export credit cover has not been available since the early 1980s when Vietnam defaulted on her trade debts, giving rise to claims on ECGD which remain unrecovered. The availability of further cover will be dependent upon ECGD's assessment of the risks and payment performance.

Package Travel Industry

Mr. Dickens: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has decided whether the Airtours bid for Owners Abroad raises questions of consumer choice which should be examined by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Heseltine: I shall take a decision on whether or not to refer this proposed acquisition to the MMC in due course, following advice from the Director General of Fair Trading. When taking that decision I shall take into account all relevant factors.

Microwave Transmitters

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence he has identified from published and as yet unpublished reports available to him pointing to ill effects on human and other life forms from the siting of microwave transmitters on multi-storey domestic premises.

Mr. Leigh: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave to earlier questions on 14 December 1992, Official Report, columns 26-27 and 22 January 1993, column 497. I am not aware of any unpublished information which would lead me to alter the terms of those answers.

Company Accounts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had on proposals to require the declarations of payment practices in company accounts and reports; and what conclusions he has reached.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department issued on 25 January a consultative document on the options for taking forward our commitment that in future large companies will be required to state in their report and accounts how quickly they pay. The deadline for comments in 27 March. A copy of the document has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the working of the current requirements for disclosure of research and development expenditure in company accounts; and what plans he has to extend disclosure.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no reason to believe that the current requirements, which are contained in the Companies Act 1985 and Statement of Standard Accounting Practice No. 13, are not being generally complied with. I have no plans to extend the statutory requirements.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the membership of the Association of Authorised Public Accountants; and who performs the monitoring arrangements required by the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the association's first annual report under section 37 of the Companies Act 1989, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Textiles

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the current Turkish import regime for textiles.

Mr. Needham: A new Turkish tariff was introduced on 1 January 1993 which takes account of the latest reductions in duty granted to EC products under the EC/Turkey association agreement and the abolition of all additional levies equivalent to customs duties, except the mass housing fund. A preliminary analysis of the new tariff regime for textiles has been produced by the European Commission delegation office in Ankara; this notes EC preferences for all textile chapters and a general reduction in overall levels of protection.

Small Firms (Regulations)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all those regulations affecting small firms which have been abolished by his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Such statistics have never been assembled before. I am completing a centralised record of Government regulations against which progress on deregulation will be monitored in future.

Coal and Energy Issues

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the counties he and his ministerial colleagues have visited to discuss coal and energy issues since taking office; how many days each visit took; and if he will name the collieries visited.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 17 February 1993]: As regards visits to collieries, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 4 November 1992, Official Report, column 314. No further visits have taken place since.

Coal and energy are among the many issues my ministerial colleagues and I discuss in the course of the frequent visits we undertake. For example, I discussed these matters during my visits to the north-east on 27 July, 16 October and 10 December last year, in my role as sponsoring Minister for that region.

Foam-filled Furniture

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he has made to his advice given to charities and voluntary organisations in respect of the sale and distribution of non-compliant foam-filled furniture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended, which were made under the Consumer Protection Act 1987, apply to transactions involving the "supply" of furniture which takes place within the meaning of section 46 of that Act. My Department's view of the general position is that the simple distribution of furniture by a charity, in pursuance of its charitable objectives, either free of charge or at a nominal cost only, would be unlikely to constitute a business activity. Shops selling furniture to raise funds for charitable purposes would, in the Department's view, constitute a business activity.

"in the course of business"

As charities may engage in a variety of activities which could have a bearing on the application of the regulations, my Department strongly recommends to inquirers that they should seek legal advice in the light of all the circumstances of the operation of the charity.

EC Steel Industry

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to consult (a) the British Independent Steel Producers Association, (b) the British Steel Corporation and (c) the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation on the Government's response to the Braun report on the restructuring of the European Community steel industry;

(2) if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the European Commission report by Fernand Braun on the restructuring of the EC steel industry.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 February 1993]: I and my officials have discussed the Braun report and the Government's reaction with the British Iron and Steel Producers Association of which British Steel is now a member. There is broad agreement between Government and industry on the need for restructuring and permanent closures in other EC countries. The United Kingdom has alredy taken such steps. I have no plans to consult the Iron and Steel Traders Confederation, which is, however, represented on the European Coal and Steel Community's consultative committee. I am meeting my EC colleagues on 25 February to consider proposals for restructuring the EC steel industry.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost of providing Post Office staff support to the royal family.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The estimated annual cost of Post Office staff employed on a permanent or seconded basis on postal duties for the royal family is £200,000.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Post Office staff are seconded (a) full-time and (b) part-time from Howick place sorting office to the royal family at Buckingham palace and when the Queen is in residence elsewhere or aboard the royal yacht in harbour; and if he will make a statement on the arrangements.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Five Post Office staff are seconded full time from Howick place sorting office for postal duties at Buckingham palace. When Her Majesty the Queen is in residence elsewhere, locally based post office staff are seconded on a temporary basis, as appropriate. No Post Office staff are seconded to the royal yacht.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account his review of the Post Office is taking of the services provided to the royal family by the allocation of staff to process their mail.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The Post Office review is considering all matters relating to the future organisation and structure of the Post Office.

Power Stations

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the criteria presently employed by his Department in considering whether or not to grant section 36 consents to new power stations.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 February 1993]: It has been my right hon. Friend's policy in considering applications for his consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989, as a general rule, to treat matters such as the need for a generating station, its capacity, choice of fuel to be used and type of plant as commercial matters for the applicant concerned.

My right hon. Friend announced to the House on 26 October 1992 that he was reviewing the use of his consent powers under section 36. The outcome of this review will be included in the White Paper, which is to be published shortly.

TRANSPORT

London Cycle Routes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if his Department will help fund the proposed 1,000-mile strategic cycle route network for London; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects work to start on the proposed 1,000-mile strategic route network for London;

(3) what discussions his Department is having to ensure that each of the 32 London borough councils implement their part in the proposed 1,000-mile strategic cycle route network for London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The 1,000-mile strategic cycle network for London was developed by, and is the responsibility of, the London Cycling Forum, a working party of the London Planning Advisory Committee. The Department is an active member.

The strategic network has the full support of the Department. The majority of routes in London—about 96 per cent.—are on local roads and cycle facilities there will be for the London boroughs to provide. Cycle routes identified on trunk roads and crossing points on the trunk road network will either be provided as part of the trunk road improvement programme or through the trunk road priority route local plans.

From information available from LCF, approximately 125 miles of the cycle network is already in existence with 220 miles in preparation.

Expenditure on the provision of cycle facilities on local roads is eligible for transport supplementary grant, although it is not separately identified in the annual settlement. The traffic director for London will also fund the development and introduction of cycle facilities which he approves as part of the priority—red—route local plan process.

My Department and the traffic director for London participate in meetings of the borough cycling officer group, which was set up to discuss provision of the strategic cycle network and cycle matters in general.

Roads Programme

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the priority given in his national roads programme to the widening and improvement of existing motorways and trunk roads as compared to the construction of completely new trunk roads and motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend believes it right to continue the policy of his distinguished predecessors which placed the emphasis in the national roads programme upon upgrading the existing network.

Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he proposes to introduce to prevent motorists readjusting the exhaust systems of their vehicles after the annual vehicle test in such a way as to increase emissions.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None. The primary purpose of the annual test is to encourage motorists to maintain their vehicles in a good state of tune. Having done so, there should be little incentive for the motorist to readjust the vehicle away from this optimum setting. Those owners who nevertheless might be so inclined would be committing an offence under regulation 61(7) of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration was given to the inclusion of a test for levels of oxides of nitrogen in exhaust emissions in the annual vehicle test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The MOT test measures emissions of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons at idle speed. This simple "no load" test is designed for non-catalyst cars and is quite adequate to check the correct tune state of these vehicles. To carry out a meaningful check on the emissions of oxides of nitrogen, which occur only when the engine is under load, would require every MOT station to be equipped with very expensive chassis dynamometer and associated control equipment. A modified test for catalyst cars will be introduced before 1997 in accordance with EC directive 92/55/EEC. This modified test will check the correct functioning of the catalyst to ensure that NOx controls are operating.

Speed Limiters

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce speed limiters for privately owned motor cars.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None. Speed limiters work at one preset maximum speed and most accidents involving cars occur in built-up areas where the speed limit is well below the maximum of 70 mph.

Rail Freight

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the extra traffic flows carried by Trainload Freight and Railfreight Distribution since July 1992.

Mr. Freeman: This is a commercial matter for British Rail.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will set new financial objectives for British Rail's freight businesses; how long those objectives will apply; and if they will be disaggregated by freight market.

Mr. Freeman: Shortly. We are currently considering fresh objectives to cover the interim period until our proposals in the Railways Bill take effect.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce measures to ensure that the transport of goods by rail in Wales is and remains commercially competitive.

Mr. Freeman: It is for BR to take whatever steps it feels appropriate in the light of prevailing market conditions. For the future, privatisation of BR's freight businesses and liberalisation of access to the rail freight network offer the best prospect for a rail freight industry keenly attuned to the needs of customers.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to introduce a subsidy in respect of the transport of oil by rail in Wales.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend recently announced our intention to introduce a new grant scheme to assist rail freight operators to pay their track charges, in cases where there is genuine need and where there are environmental and other wider benefits sufficient to justify it.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost to British Rail of establishing shadow franchises along the lines announced by him on 2 February.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for British Rail. I expect most of the work to be carried out by existing British Rail employees.

Footpaths

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines his Department follows in effecting temporary diversions of footpaths as a consequence of the construction of trunk roads and motorways; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Carlisle: My right hon. Friend does not rely upon guidelines. He follows the statutory procedures laid down in the Highways Act 1980. Section 14 empowers him to deal in various ways with affected footpaths by stopping them up, by altering or diverting them, and by providing new ones. On occasion the local highway authority exercise these powers on his behalf. The statutory procedures for making and confirming the requisite orders are set out in the first schedule to the Act; they require the publishing of draft orders, the consideration of objections and the holding as necessary of a local inquiry.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Vietnam

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to establish the British Council in Vietnam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None at present. The British Council has decided that, whilst Vietnam remains a priority, it cannot establish a presence in Hanoi for budgetary reasons.

Thailand

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken to put to the Burmese authorities the plight of Burmese women and children who are trafficked to Thailand for prostitution.

Mr. Goodlad: The trafficking of women and children into Thailand for prostitution is a matter of serious concern.

The Burmese authorities appear to be well aware of the problem and to be co-operating with UNICEF and WHO in tackling it. The embassy in Rangoon monitors the situation and is in regular contact with Burmese health officials and UN agencies based in Rangoon.

Correspondence

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the penultimate paragraph of the letter of 4 February, ref. GV100/17123, from the migration and visa correspondence unit to the hon. Member for Ilford, South in a form which does not identify the individuals concerned.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The penultimate paragraph of the migration and visa correspondence unit letter of 4 February, ref. GV100/17123, was intended as background information only to the handling of a specific application within the requirements of the immigration rules.

Immigration control policy, as implemented by entry clearance officers overseas, is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

BBC World Service

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how his Department monitors the performance of the BBC world service and its effectiveness in promoting Britain throughout the world.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the world service regularly review the performance and cost-effectiveness of world service broadcasts in meeting agreed objectives and targets, taking into account the audibility of broadcasts, the size and profile of their audiences and the impact and influence of programmes. Information comes principally from internationally recognised audience research data, reports from our diplomatic missions, and correspondence received by the world service.

AIDS (Burma)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken to call for an investigation into the whereabouts of AIDS-infected Burmese prostitutes who have disappeared.

Mr. Goodlad: We are aware of allegations that HIV-positive Burmese prostitutes returned from Thailand have disappeared but we have seen no evidence to support these allegations. According to the Burmese authorities, prostitutes who are found to be HIV-positive are counselled, and treated for sexually transmitted diseases if appropriate, before being returned to their families.

PRIME MINISTER

Mordechai Vanunu

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to raise the case of Mordechai Vanunu with President Herzog of Israel during his visit to the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: This matter has been raised informally with the Israeli Government. I do not plan to raise it formally with the President.

Road Casualties

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a table to show comparable data on road casualty rates for (a) Scotland and (b) England and Wales.

The Prime Minister: The latest comparable rates for these countries is published in tables 1, 4 and 8 of "Road Accident Statistics English Regions 1991", a copy of which is in the Library.

Manufacturing Initiatives

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister what further initiatives he is planning to rebuild the United Kingdom manufacturing base.

The Prime Minister: The Government fully appreciate the part played by manufacturing industry in securing the United Kingdom's long-term prosperity. I, and my Cabinet colleagues, will continue to pay close attention to manufacturing industry's concerns across the full range of the Government's decisions.

Nuclear Weapons (Discussions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to discuss with President Clinton (a) collaboration on the safety of nuclear weapons, (b) the negotiation of a competitive test ban treaty and (c) article 6 of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There will be no formal agenda, but I expect to have wide-ranging discussions with President Clinton and members of his administration.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 23 February.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 23 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having meetings with ministerial colleagues and others later today.

ENVIRONMENT

Property Values

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the number of households where the value of the property is less than the value of the mortgage.

Sir George Young: The number of owner-occupiers with mortgages larger than the value of their houses in the fourth quarter of 1992 is estimated at about 1 million, excluding any that have increased their mortgage indebtedness since buying their dwellings. There is insufficient information to estimate their number. The figure of 1 million is subject to considerable uncertainty, due to the very limited amount of information about house purchase loans from lenders other than building societies.

LAMSAC

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what cost has been apportioned to each local authority association, and each local authority, to meet the debts of the Local Authorities Management Services and Computer Committee consequent upon its wind-up;

(2) what contribution his Department made to the Local Authority Conditions of Service Advisory Board and the Local Government Management Board since 1988 to meet the costs of LAMSAC prior and subsequent to its wind-up;

(3) what proportion of the top-slicing of rate support grant, made available to the local authority associations, was devoted in each year since 1989 to meet the debts of LAMSAC;

(4) what involvement his Department has in the winding-up of LAMSAC.

Mr. Robin Squire: I will write to the hon. Member.

Tourism

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department has taken to implement the recommendations of "Tourism in the UK: Realising the Potential" as it applies to his Department's responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Together with the Department of National Heritage, we have commissioned research into the feasibility of obtaining better information on the numbers of day visitors, to assist the calculation of standard spending assessments. It is hoped that the results of this research will be available for incorporation into SSAs for 1994-95.

Urban Needs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors he proposes to take into account in his analysis of urban needs based on the 1991 census data; what weighting he proposes to give to each factor; and what additional data not contained in the census he will be seeking.

Mr. Robin Squire: A report on this subject by the Centre for Urban Policy Studies will shortly be circulated to local authority associations and voluntary organisations. The report will consider the factors which might be taken into account in analysing urban needs in the light of the 1991 census and other data. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the Ofwat report regarding discrepancies in the cost of water and sewerage services.

Mr. Maclean: None. The system established under the 1989 legislation is designed to encourage companies to become as efficient as possible. Some variation in unit costs between companies will result from their differing circumstances. The Director General of Water Services is continuing to examine differences in unit costs.

Rent Rebates

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payment of rent rebates on housing revenue account tenancies was paid to Lambeth council for February, March and April 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: A housing authority's expenditure on the rent rebates it grants to its housing revenue account tenants is one of several factors which are taken into account when determining its entitlement to housing revenue account subsidy. For each financial year, on-account payments of HRA subsidy are made to housing authorities by my Department in 10 instalments, from May to February. Payments are not made in March or April.

Details of on-account payments of HRA subsidy to Lambeth borough council in respect of HRA rent rebate expenditure throughout 1992, were included in the answer given to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security on 15 February, Hansard, Vol. 219, cols 100-01.

British Waterways Bill

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of the British Waterways Bill on commercial shipping;

(2) if he will list the British waterways docks planned to be closed as a result of the British Waterways Bill.

Mr. Maclean: The British Waterways Bill removes the statutory duty to make the Weston Points docks available to commercial traffic, but does not prevent navigation through the docks or their operation by another party. I understand that for some years there has been no such traffic through Weston Point docks. There should be no effect on commercial shipping. More generally the Bill seeks to enable the British Waterways Board to carry out its functions more efficiently to the benefit of all users, including commercial shipping.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to inform the public about ozone depletion levels over the United Kingdom and the northern hemisphere for the winter and spring of 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean: Details of ozone levels over the United Kingdom and the northern hemisphere this winter and spring will be published in the autumn in the next report by the Department's stratospheric ozone review group. Dobson spectrophotomer data would be made available through the Meteorological Office in the event of significant deviations from the normal range of winter and spring ozone levels.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department is funding to monitor the rate of ozone depletion over the United Kingdom for the winter and spring of 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean: The Department has supported atmospheric ozone measurements at Lerwick since 1991 and will continue to do so throughout the winter and spring of 1992-93 and beyond. In addition, the Department also supports the development of methods for monitoring ground level UVB irradiation at Reading university.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest available information on ozone depletion over the United Kingdom and northern hemisphere for the winter of 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean: The latest estimate of the average depletion of the ozone layer at British latitudes, based on the 1992 WMO/UNEP scientific assessment of ozone depletion, is 8 per cent. per decade in winter and early spring. I am advised by the Cambridge ozone research co-ordinating unit and the Meteorological Office that the levels of ozone measured over the United Kingdom during the current winter are consistent with the WMO/UNEP assessment of long-term depletion, but still within the previously observed ranges for the time of year.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current ozone depletion levels for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) earlier today.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how often the levels of ozone depletion are measured over the United Kingdom; and how the figures are made publicly available.

Mr. Maclean: Total ozone measurements are made daily when meteorological conditions permit by the United Kingdom Meteorological Office and the results submitted to the provisional centre for the World Meteorological Organisation's ozone mapping project. The Department supports two ozone profile measurements per week at Lerwick and the results are disseminated through the scientific literature and by the reports of the Department's stratospheric ozone review group. I would also refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) earlier today.

Business Rate Appeals

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many business rate appeals are currently outstanding.

Mr. Robin Squire: At the end of December 1992 valuation tribunals in England had outstanding some 460,000 non-domestic rating appeals.

Following the revaluation on 1 April 1990, English tribunals initially received some 600,000 appeals, mostly towards the end of that financial year. Since then around 470,000 appeals have been resolved, and a further 330,000 received.

Nitrous Oxide Emissions

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 106, when he expects to publish estimates of nitrous oxide emissions in the United Kingdom during 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Maclean: The best current estimate for emissions of nitrous oxide in the United Kingdom will be reported in my Department's Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics No. 15, which is due for release in April 1993.

An estimate of emissions during 1992 will be released in Digest No. 16, which is due for publication in spring 1994.

Water Disconnections

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people in England had their water supplies disconnected in 1992 for non-payment of bills; and what percentage were pensioners.

Mr. Maclean: Information on disconnections of water supplies to pensioners is not available. Total numbers of domestic disconnections for 1991-92 were given in my answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) on 4 November 1992, Official Report, columns 234-35. Information on domestic disconnections for the six-month period from 1 April to 30 September 1992 was given in my answer to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) on 18 November 1992, Official Report, columns 204-5.

Local Authority Tenants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to give local authority tenants, living in homes in serious disrepair, the same protection as is afforded to private sector tenants under the Housing Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: None. I have seen no evidence to suggest that the law as it stands is in practice giving rise to any unfairness to council tenants.

Capital Receipts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the value of local authorities' capital receipts resulting from (a) sales of council housing and (b) sales of other assets made subsequent to the autumn statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities provide quarterly returns to the Department, giving their current estimates of capital receipts received to date. The first available information on cumulative receipts received up to 31 December 1992 is expected to be available during April.

Water Metering

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many EC member countries currently have some system of water metering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Some system of water metering exists in all EC countries. In England and Wales it is for water companies to decide on their preferred method of charging in the light of the circumstances in their operating area.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will order an inquiry into the Isle of Wight water metering project when it finishes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No. Information on setting up and running the Isle of Wight water metering trial and the small-scale trials is contained in two interim reports, copies of which are in the Library. A final report is expected to be published in the spring. I will ensure that copies of this report are also placed in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the people of the Isle of Wight regarding the water metering project; if he will publish them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have received a small number of letters about meter installation and billing issues. I do not intend to make these public. For details of reports on the metering trial on the Isle of Wight I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him earlier.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present extent of (a) volumetric and (b) pre-payment metering consumption in domestic properties in England and Wales, region by region.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer Monday 22 February]: The information requested is not held centrally. However, I understand that about 3 per cent. of households receive a metered water supply and that several small-scale trials of prepayment meters are being conducted. The second interim report of the water metering trials indicates that in the small-scale trials the average annual consumption per property was 137 cu m.

Environment Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made towards the establishment of the proposed environment agency.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced the Government's plans for the environment agency on 15 July 1992. Consideration is now being given to the detailed provisions which would be necessary to establish such an agency and legislation will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

Packaging

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation to reduce levels of packaging in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: We have no such plans at present. We have been discussing with the packaging industry ways in which the environmental impact of packaging can be reduced and are currently considering whether to introduce economic instruments to encourage the recovery of resources from waste.

Small Firms (Regulations)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those regulations affecting small firms which have been abolished by his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Robin Squire: Since 1979 a series of measures has been taken to reduce and simplify the amount of regulation. All my Department's regulations which impact on business are currently being reviewed to ensure that, where they are necessary, they impose the minimum burden.

Sellafield

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the alpha discharges were from the B204 stack at Sellafield for the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: Using the latest calibration factors the alpha releases from the B204 stack and for comparison the total for all schedule 1 stacks were:

	B204 stack MBq	All schedule 1 stacks MBq
[1]1992	113	169
1991	158	274
1990	193	263
1989	262	338
1988	376	459

[1] The 1992 figures do not yet include the December returns.

The present annual limit for all schedule 1 stacks is 4,300 MBq.

These should be compared with the range in my answer to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), on 15 February, at column 21.

Ward Boundaries, Brent

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision regarding the Local Government Boundary Commission's recommendations for changes in the local ward boundaries of Brent.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 22 February 1993]: My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet reached his decision on the Local Government Boundary Commission proposals for changes to the local government boundaries around Brent. When a decision is reached on boundary changes, he will consult the Home Secretary on any electoral consequences.

Disused Canals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the protection of the lines of disused canals within local planning procedures.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Our policy is set out in our planning policy guidance notes—PPG4, paragraph 11, and more generally in PPG12. We will consult shortly on more detailed guidance in a revised PPG13, "Transport".

Office of Water Services

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the administration of OFWAT in each year from 1990-91, and projected for 1993-94.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 22 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 144. The Director General's "Annual Report 1990", a copy of which is in the Library, records OFWAT's expenditure in 1990-91 as £4·3 million. £9·7 million has been voted in estimates, class VII, vote 9, to cover the expenditure of OFWAT for 1993-94.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Veal

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what steps he is taking to ensure that veal used by parliamentary caterers is produced by the Quantock method rather than by crating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The Director of Catering Services informs me that the veal used in the Refreshment Department is purchased only from suppliers who use the Quantock method of rearing veal calves.

Sitting Hours

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will report progress on the reform of the sitting hours of the House.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave on Monday 22 February, at column 679, to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Training and Employment Agency

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the assistance and programmes the Training and Employment Agency makes available to assist unemployed people look for work; what changes are planned in these programmes in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Ms. Clare Short, dated 22 February 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he would make a statement about the assistance and programmes the Training and Employment Agency makes available to assist unemployed people look for work and what changes are planned in these programmes in 1993-94. The Secretary of State has passed your questions to me, as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, for reply.

The Agency has a network of 31 local offices, linked by central computer, which delivers an all-age guidance and placement service. The full range of employment and training services is available through the network of "one stop shops" which, since April 1992, have helped around 35,000 adults to find jobs or a place on an Agency scheme.

For those out of work for a lengthy period the Agency runs a Restart programme which is specifically designed to provide help and encouragement to those who have been unemployed for more than six months. In the course of the programme everyone in this category is invited to attend an interview in their local Agency office. During the interview each person is given advice on job vacancies or offered a place on an Action for Community Employment (ACE) Scheme, Jobclub or training course. Responsibility for the Restart Programme will transfer to the Social Security Agency from April 1993.

The Training and Employment Agency also provides practical help with job-hunting for the long-term unemployed, through a network of 28 Jobclubs. Members are given advice on aspects such as the completion of application forms, CVs, preparation for interviews etc and the Jobclub provides photocopying, typing, telephone, stationery and postage facilities.

In addition the Agency also provides training programmes for the unemployed. The Youth Training Programme (YTP) and the Job Training Programme (JTP) provide all entrants to the labour market and the adult unemployed respectively with the opportunity to obtain skills and qualifications to help them compete for suitable jobs.

YTP offers 16 and 17 year olds a structured programme of directed and workplace training of up to 2 years' duration. JTP offers those aged 18 and under 60 an individually tailored programme of up to one year of directed training and practical workplace-based experience.

The Action for Community Employment (ACE) Scheme provides temporary employment, with training, of up to one year's duration for long-term unemployed adults in a wide range of projects of benefit to the community. Each programme provides an element of jobsearch skills/interview techniques for participants.

There are no changes planned for YTP/JTP and ACE during 1993-94. However the Agency is currently piloting a single, integrated scheme which may replace both YTP and JTP and which will offer training to entrants to the labour market and to the unemployed.

I hope that this information is of help.

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the most recent information he has on the destination of youth training programme leavers; and of those who found employment, how many were with the employer who provided their training.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Ms. Clare Short, dated 22 February 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the most recent information he has on the destination of Youth Training Programme leavers; and of those who found employment, how many were with the employer who provided the training.

As the Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency which has Executive responsibility for these matters I have been asked to reply.

The most recent information available on the destinations of participants leaving the Youth Training Programme is for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 January 1993. This shows that 6,264 (56%) leavers went into employment, 1,335 (12%) went into full time education and 3,651 (32%) became unemployed.

Figures for YTP leavers who found employment with the employer who provided their training are not available.

Job Plan Workshops

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce job plan workshops for the long-term unemployed; what effect this will have on entitlement to benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Ms. Clare Short, dated 19 February 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce Jobplan Workshops for the long-term unemployed in Northern Ireland, what effect this would have on entitlement benefit and if he will make a statement.

As Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency I have been asked to reply.

The Training and Employment Agency currently provides practical help for long-term unemployed jobseekers through a network of 28 Jobclubs. Members are given advice on the completion of application forms and CVs and preparation for interviews etc. Jobclubs provide photocopying, typing, telephone, stationery and postage facilities.

In addition assistance towards finding work or suitable training is provided to the long term unemployed through counselling under the Restart Programme.

At present there are no plans in Northern Ireland to introduce Jobplan Workshops but consideration will be given to what action should be taken to be of further help to the long term unemployed in the light of developments in Great Britain and local circumstances.

Action for Community Employment

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at the latest available date how many people were employed on action for community employment; how many of them were employed (a) part time and (b) full time; and if he will divide the figures into males and females.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Ms. Clare Short, dated 19 February 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at the latest available date how many people were employed on Action for Community Employment; how many of them were employed (a) Part time, (b) Full time; and if he will divide the figure into males and females. As Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency which has executive responsibility for this matter in Northern Ireland I have been asked to reply.

At 31 January there was a total of 9,660 people employed on the Action for Community Employment (ACE) programme. This figure was made up of 7,245 full time (4,347 males and 2,898 females) and 2,415 part time (676 males and 1,739 females).

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the eligibility rules for the job training programme and action for community employment schemes and on the training and income participants are entitled to when they participate in the programme; and what changes are planned in these schemes for 1993-94.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Ms. Clare Short, dated 22 February 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he would make a statement about the eligibility rules for the Job Training Programme and Action for Community Employment Schemes; the training and income participants are entitled to when they participate in the programme; and what changes are planned in these schemes for 1993-94.

The Secretary of State has passed your questions to me, as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, for reply.

Applicants for the Job Training Programme (JTP) are eligible if they

(a) are aged 18 and under 60; and
(b) have been continuously unemployed for at least 26 weeks.

The Programme is also open to certain other groups who are not registered as unemployed. A full list of those other groups is attached at Annex A.

Participants in JTP follow individually tailored programmes of training and practical workplace based experience and have the opportunity to acquire vocational qualifications.

Participants on JTP receive a training allowance equivalent to their normal Social Security benefit plus a premium of £10·00 per week.

To be eligible for the Action for Community Employment (ACE) Scheme applicants must satisfy the following three conditions:

(i) be at least 18 and under 64 years;
(ii) have been unemployed without a break for at least 3 months immediately before starting on an ACE project; and
(iii) have been unemployed for at least 12 months out of the last 15 months.

Exceptions to condition (iii) are listed in Annex B.

Each ACE employee will spend on average 20 per cent. of their time in training. Training seeks to address two levels of need—training for the ACE job and training for future employment.

All ACE workers are paid the local rate for the job, subject to normal deductions such as National Insurance and income tax.

There are no substantive changes planned for either JTP or ACE during 1993-94. However the Agency is currently piloting a single integrated scheme called Jobskills which could eventually replace both the Job Training Programme and the Youth Training Programme.

I hope that this information is of help.

Annex A

Eligibility for job training programme

Special groups of unemployed people for whom exemptions to the normal 6 months unemployment conditions are applicable:

(a) People with disabilities (registered or unregistered).
(b) Single (lone) parents.
(c) Ex-regular members of HM Forces.
(d) Returners to the labour market.
(e) People interested in business start-up or other enterprise training.
(f) People wishing to train in skills that are in short supply.
(g) Employees who have been made redundant.
(h) People who need literacy and/or numeracy training.

Annex B

Eligibility for action for community employment (ACE) scheme

Exceptions to the conditions that a person must have been unemployed for at least 12 months out of the last 15 months.

(a) Unemployed 18-24 year olds who have been unemployed for over 6 months.
(b) Young people who have been recently on the Youth Training Programme may count up to a maximum: of 3 months full time training on the programme as unemployment with the balance of the 6 months to be made up of normal unemployment.
(c) Adults who have recently been on the Job Training Programme or at a course at a Training Centre or in Enterprise Ulster may count all of the time spent as unemployment.
(d) Registered disabled people need only have been unemployed for at least 6 out of the last 12 months. They are also permitted to remain in ACE for 18 months instead of the usual 12 months.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the most recent information he has on the destination of people who leave action for community employment and the job training programme; how many leavers got jobs, became unemployed or went on to further training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Ms Clare Short, dated 22 February 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for information on the destination of people who leave Action for Community Employment and the Job Training Programme; and how many leavers got jobs, became unemployed or went on to further training.

As the Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency which has executive responsibility for these matters I have been asked to reply.

The most recent information available on the destination of people who left the Action for Community Employment scheme is based on a sample survey for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 January 1993. This shows that 28 per cent. moved into employment, 2 per cent. into further education or training, and 70 per cent. into unemployment. A full survey in 1991 showed 35 per cent. moving into employment, 4 per cent. into education and training and 61 per cent. into unemployment.

Over the period 1 April 1992 to 31 January 1993 in the Job Training Programme 29 per cent. of leavers moved into employment, 16 per cent. into further education or training and 55 per cent. into unemployment.

Electricity Works

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the nature and cost of major works carried out by Northern Ireland Electricity in the constituency of Newry and Armagh within the last 12 months.

Mr. Atkins: Major works carried out by Northern Ireland Electricity in the constituency of Newry and Armagh in the last 12 months were:

(i) New substation adjacent to Drumalane Playing Fields—£347,000.
(ii) Strengthening of system to substation at Carnbane Industrial Estate—£50,000.
(iii) System improvements in Camlough area (continuing)—£195,000)

Newry and Armagh

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the unemployment rates in each ward within the constituency of Newry and Armagh, or such relevant statistics as are available, for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Atkins: Whilst unemployment rates are not available at ward level, current and historical information on the actual number of unemployed by age and duration of unemployment for each ward within the constituency of Newry and Armagh is available from the NOMIS database, which can be accessed on-line by House of Commons Library staff.

Travellers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost to public funds of the "With Not For" conference for travelling people on Monday 30 March 1992; and how many civil servants, district council officers, area health board officers, area education board officers and housing executive officers attended this conference.

Mr. Atkins: The total cost to public funds of the "With Not For" conference for travelling people was £18,604·87.

A total of 160 delegates attended the conference, including 13 civil servants, 18 district council officers, 13 area health board officers, three area education board officers and two Northern Ireland Housing Executive officers.

Motoring Offences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number of motoring offences, by category, which incur a fixed penalty and the amount of the penalty in each case.

Mr. Atkins: At present there are 153 offences which may be discharged by the payment of a fixed penalty. These have been broadly grouped in the table.

Category	Number of offences
1. Speeding	2
Obstruction—waiting—parking	21
Pedestrian crossings	8
Lighting	19
Others	10
2. Vehicle or parts—dangerous condition	46
Noise	6
Neglect traffic directions	5
Miscellaneous	9
3. Driving licence—vehicle test certificate	4
Goods vehicle—PSV offences	6
Motor cycles	5
Length and width	3
Weight and load	9

Each offence currently carries a penalty of £20.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to the report from the Comptroller and Auditor-General for Northern Ireland on the training and employment of disabled people; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Alfred Morris, dated 18 February 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what consideration he has given to the report from the Comptroller and Auditor General for Northern Ireland on the Training and Employment of disabled people, what action he will be taking and if he will make a statement.

As Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency (Northern Ireland) (T and EA), I have responsibility for the services on which the Comptroller and Auditor General for Northern Ireland has reported.

We have carefully considered the report. We have noted, amongst other things, the acknowledgement of the improvements made since the Agency reorganised its services to people with disabilities in January 1991.

The Agency is determined to maintain this improvement in its services available to disabled people and is drawing up a programme of further action to this end.

Employment Statistics

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current percentage employment in the Belfast Education and Library board of Protestants and Roman Catholics in the various grades; and what are the corresponding figures in the 1981 and 1991 census returns covering the Belfast travel-to-work area.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

HEALTH

GP Fund Holders

13. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in spreading the effects of the GP fund-holding initiative in Dorset to patients of GPs who are not fund holders.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioner fund holders are achieving real benefits for their patients by innovative and sensitive purchasing of health care. District health authorities can reflect the standards set by fund holders in contracting for the patients of other GPs. In Dorset this is being achieved through the Dorset Health Commission, set up by the Wessex regional health authority, which is taking account of all GP's views, including fund holders, in developing purchasing plans.

18. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend the GP fund-holding scheme to smaller practices.

Dr. Mawhinney: The minimum list size criteria for general practitioner fund holders is being lowered from 9,000 to 7,000 from 1 April 1993. We are enabling smaller practices to join either by linking with another practice, or through an agency arrangement with their local family health services authority or district health authority.

21. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that patients on waiting lists of fund-holding and non-fundholding GPs are treated equally.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance agreed with the joint consultants committee was issued to hospital consultants in June 1991. It set out the criteria for contracts between general practitioner fund holders and all national health service hospitals, and clearly states that common waiting lists should be used and the fund holders should not be offered contracts which would disadvantage other patients.

23. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of how GPs' interest in the fund-holding initiative has changed since the scheme began.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Sir R. Moate) earlier today.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the 1992-93 budget allocation by region and family health service authority for hospital costs generated by general practitioner non-fund holders for those parts of the hospital and community health services that a general practitioner fund holder would have had allocated funds.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regions give allocations to district health authorities on the basis of their resident population and not in relation to the number of non-fundholding general practitioners within the district. Furthermore district health authorities and family health services authorities are not usually coterminous. Information is not therefore available in the form requested.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 752, what steps she has taken to ensure that the joint guidance issued to hospital consultants on general practitioner fund holding is being properly enforced; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We remain committed to the principles set out in the guidance. Providers should not offer contracts to one purchaser which would disadvantage the patients of another, and common waiting lists should apply for urgent and serious conditions. Equally, we stand by the principle that purchasers, both fund holders and district health authorities, should be able to purchase spare capacity if this becomes available. Regional health authorities are responsible for monitoring compliance with the guidance.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health further to her answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 203, what reasons underlie the different treatment of general practitioner fund holders and non-fund holders for sessions for tests and minor surgery.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fundholding and non-fundholding general practitioners are not being treated differently. Regulations have been changed to allow fund holders to receive remuneration from the fund for treating their own patients, putting them in the same position as non-fund holders, who may already provide these services under contract to district health authorities.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region the allocation, for general practitioner fund holders in 1992-93, for prescribing.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is in the table.

Tomlinson Report

14. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has instituted on the effects on health care in London of implementing the Tomlinson report.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have announced our response to the Tomlinson report in the policy document "Making London Better", after fully considering the evidence both in the report and in other studies. We have accepted the need for radical change and our policy will deliver the high-quality health service Londoners need.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the recommendations in the Tomlinson report which were not accepted.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have accepted the key principles of the Tomlinson report and 96 of its 106 recommendations. The Government's full proposals for improving London's health services are set out in "Making London Better".

Hospitals (Costs)

15. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received suggesting national health service hospitals will be taking action to cut costs by reducing patient care during the current financial year.

Mr. Sackville: My colleagues and I have received and responded to correspondence from a range of sources concerning this.

There is no reason why hospitals should not be able to plan their activity over the whole year, without cost cutting. We are spending more on health and treating more patients than ever before.

Removal of Children (Essex)

16. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with Essex social services regarding their actions in removing children from their natural parents; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I have been in contact with the chairman of Essex social services committee and discussions have taken place between the chief inspector of the social services inspectorate and the director of social services about two cases in which children in Essex were removed from their natural parents, one in 1989, the other last year. The local authority were asked to review current child care cases and consider what other action is necessary for the future.

Primary Health Care (London)

17. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her proposals for improving primary health care in London.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the Government's proposals for London's health services, including primary care, on 17 February. We are setting in place a major programme to develop higher-quality, more accessible primary health services at local level. Our aim is to bring primary care in London up to the high standards found elsewhere in the country and to equip it to face the challenges and opportunities of health care provision in the 21st century.

Children Act 1989

19. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to issue further guidance to local authorities on the operation of the Children Act 1989 in the light of the report on the first year of the Act's implementation.

Mr. Yeo: We have no immediate plans to do so, but we are keeping under review the Children Act guidance and will issue more as and when the need arises.

International Adoption

20. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further discussions she intends to have with adoption agencies about international adoption, and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We will continue to discuss international adoption issues with adoption agencies as necessary, as part of our normal contact with them.

Out-patient Appointments

22. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made towards reaching patients charter targets for waiting times for out-patient appointments.

Mr. Sackville: Under the patients charter, health authorities have already set and published local charter standards for first out-patient appointments. We shall develop these standards further in 1993-94.

Community Treatment Orders

24. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received regarding the possibility of introducing community treatment orders.

Mr. Yeo: We have received views from many organisations and individuals. They will be taken fully into account by the departmental team which, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State stated in her reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 13 January at column 731, is reviewing the legal powers in this field. The team will be seeking further views as its work proceeds.

Ambulance Service

25. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies her Department has made of the effect of the closure of Leyland-DAF on the ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: Leyland-DAF has entered into administrative receivership with a view to operating the business as a going concern. National Health Service Supplies is currently in daily contact with the company to monitor the situation in respect of the placement of future orders for vehicles for the ambulance service.

Community Care

26. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions are being made for the new community care programme to ensure that improvements are introduced into the care of the elderly and the disabled; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The introduction of assessment of individuals' care needs will ensure that services are increasingly tailored to need rather than need to services. Improved responsiveness to need will lead to a wider choice of services being delivered by an increasing variety of providers. A total of £565 million is being made available to local authorities in 1993-94 through a ring-fenced special transitional grant to enable them to implement the new arrangements.

27. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met representatives of the British Association of Social Workers to discuss the implementation of the community care proposals.

Mr. Yeo: I met representatives of the British Association of Social Workers on 11 November 1992. A number of issues were discussed including the implementation of community care.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been released into the community from psychiatric institutions in each of the past three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The table shows the estimated number of discharges into the community from national health service hospitals in England from 1987-88 to 1989-90. The figures do not reflect the number of patients leaving hospitals, as a person can be discharged more than once during the year.

Discharges from national health service hospitals and units in England

Year	Number
1987-88	175,910
1988-89	182,903
1989-90	177,752

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received about the continuing closure of psychiatric hospitals and the finding of community care.

Mr. Yeo: We have received seven representations from interested organisations and 57 from individuals since 1 January 1993 about the closure of psychiatric hospitals and the funding of community care.

28. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 474, what information she has on the number of times permission was granted by the Secretary of State for the emigration of a child in care between 1967 and 14 October 1991.

Mr. Yeo: Archive papers are stored under the name of the individual child. As I explained in my answer of 8 February at column 474, information regarding the numbers involved could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Beds (London)

29. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the need to increase or reduce the supply of hospital beds in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: The demand for hospital beds in London in the future will depend both on improvements in efficiency and primary services, and on how many patients are treated locally rather than being referred to London. While it is impossible to predict precisely the speed of these changes, in our policy document "Making London Better" we made a cautious estimate of 2,000 to 2,500 fewer acute beds in four to five years' time.

Mental Health Services (Ethnic Minorities)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being funded by her Department into the provision of mental health services to meet the needs of ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Yeo: The Department is currently funding two research projects in respect of black and ethnic minorities. Both relate to aspects of psychosis in Afro-Caribbean people. The Medical Research Council is, however, the main route for funding research in psychiatry.

Folic Acid

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the folic acid supplements recommended for women intending to have children in the recent report of the Chief Medical Officer's expert advisory group will be available without a prescription; and what charge will be made.

Mr. Sackville: The report recommended that to prevent a recurrence of neural tube defects women should be prescribed folic acid supplements until the 12th week of pregnancy at a dose of 5mg per day. As there are rare but potentially serious hazards of folic acid therapy at these levels in particular groups of people there are no plans to make this dose available without a prescription.

To prevent a first occurrence of neural tube defect women planning a pregnancy are advised to take a supplement of 0·4mg folic acid from the start of trying to conceive until the 12th week of pregnancy. These supplements are available over the counter at many health food stores and chemists at a cost of around £1 for a month's supply.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the contracts awarded by her Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92;

(2) how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The information has been placed in the Library.

Hartley Hospital, Colne

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Hartley hospital in Colne ceased to be used as an NHS hospital; what amount has since been spent on its maintenance; what valuation has been made of it; and what plans there are for an open market sale.

Mr. Sackville: Hartley hospital was vacated in December 1989. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bruce Martin, chairman of North Western regional health authority, for further details.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 463, what is her Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: Estimated expenditure on communications and publicity for 1992-93 is £22 million.

The budget for 1993-94 is £23·7 million.

"Caring for People"

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to issue further guidance to local authorities on charges to users of social services provided under "Caring for People".

Mr. Yeo: As envisaged in "Caring for People" we have issued guidance and made regulations about charges to people in residential and nursing homes from April 1993. Local social services authorities also have powers to charge users of day and domiciliary services where this is reasonable. The Government's long-established policy on the use of these powers is well known. we consider that further guidance will be more useful if it can reflect early experience of implementing "Caring for People". We plan to issue such guidance once that has been assessed.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further consideration she has given to calls from disability organisations for the implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Most of the major provisions of the Act have now been implemented, bringing substantial benefits to disabled people and their carers. The requirements of the non-implemented sections of the Act are now, to a very large extent, reflected in the new and wide-ranging reforms of community care, which demonstrate our commitment to high-quality care responsive to the needs and wishes of service users and carers. The need to implement these sections will therefore be reviewed in the light of several years' experience of the community care arrangements.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of state for Health what representations she has received on the need to empower local authorities to enable them to make direct cash payments to disabled people to make their own personal assistance arrangements.

Mr. Yeo: I have received a number of representations. I have, however, no plans to amend long-standing legislation in this way.

District Health Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of state for Health how many district health authorities will receive less funding through the transfer to weighted capitation in 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: In 1993-94 the following 24 district health authorities, all of which are currently receiving more than their share of their region's resources, will receive less funding, at constant prices, than in 1992-93.

DHA's which will have their funding reduced in 1993-94

Fluoridation

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities in England and Wales have requested fluoridation of water supplies in their region; and in which health authorities water is currently fluoridated.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Patients (Protection)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what quality assurance mechanisms she is considering to protect vulnerable groups of patients; and what assessment she has made of the appropriateness of BS5750 accreditation.

Mr. Yeo: Purchasers are required to set standards of quality in the contracts they place with providers.

The Department is funding an evaluation of major accreditation and organisational audit schemes, including BS5750, to establish the benefits relevant to the national health service.

Mental Illness

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy advice or guidelines she has issued concerning the treatment of those suffering from mental illness in secure units; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The treatment of mental illness is the responsibility of the professionals involved. The code of practice issued under the Mental Health Act 1983 provides guidance on the operation of that Act. Current needs for treatment in secure conditions are among the issues considered in the reports of the joint Department of Health/Home Office review of services for mentally disordered offenders (Cm. 2088, 1992). In the light of the review's recommendations we have increased capital funding for medium secure services from £3 million in 1991-92 to £17 million in 1992-93 and £22·4 million in 1993-94.

Health Advisory Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent changes there have been in the strategic brief, method of operation and independence of the health advisory service; and what announcements she has made of them.

Mr Yeo: Following a ministerial review in 1991, the national health service health advisory service now has a new remit compatible with the NHS reforms and the Government's new policies for care in the community. The HAS will continue to undertake reviews of local services, but a proportion of its resources will be allocated to examinations of particular aspects of the management of care and quality standards. These changes were announced in January 1992. The HAS remains independent and it retains the status of a non-departmental public body.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are made for the publication of annual reports by the health advisory service.

Mr. Yeo: Following the review of the national health service health advisory service and the appointment of the new director, all future annual reports will be published as soon as possible after receipt.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in discussions between the health advisory service and other monitoring bodies concerned with health and social services care.

Mr. Yeo: During his first months in office, the present director met many other monitoring bodies whose views have been taken into account in the formulation of the national health service health advisory service's forward programme.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many visits were completed by the health advisory service other than in respect of drug services; how many reports were published in each quarter since 1991; how many person/days were employed on these visits and subsequent report writing, for each quarter, in respect of (a) psychiatrists, psychogeriatricians and geriatricians, (b) nurses, (c) therapists representing the professions allied to medicine, (d) managers and (e) social service inspectors; how many visits are planned for the period 1 January to 31 March; and how many person/days of each of the professional groups it is planned to employ.

Mr. Yeo: No visits to review services for mentally ill and elderly people have taken place since 1991. Twelve reports were published during January-March 1992 and six during April-May 1992, relating to the final 18 of the 40 visits undertaken during 1991. No visits have been planned for the period January-March 1993.

Nurses

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many enrolled nurses, working within the national health service, underwent professional development training (a) prior to and (b) following the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to (a) directly managed hospitals and (b) national health service trusts with regard to funding for conversion courses for enrolled nurses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities and employing authorities are aware of their responsibilities regarding enrolled nurse conversion.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department is taking to ensure that opportunities for professional development are open to all enrolled nurses irrespective of ethnic origin.

Mr. Sackville: We are committed to a policy of equal opportunity for all staff in the national health service. It is an employer responsibility to ensure that professional development opportunities are made available irrespective of ethnic origin.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department is taking to encourage enrolled nurses who are not in employment back into the nursing profession; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for the recruitment of qualified nurses rests with employers.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has (a) to increase and (b) to standardise professional development opportunities for enrolled nurses working within the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We are committed to increasing the number of places available for level two to level one conversion as part of the Project 2000 reforms. Central funding has been made available to facilitate this and on 12 February we announced additional funding for Project 2000 in 1993-94. However, it is for regional health authorities, in consultation with employers, to plan for enrolled nurse conversion.

Chemists

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will arrange a meeting with the pharmaceutical industry to discuss whether chemists will check, in return for a small fee, the eligibility of those claiming free prescriptions.

Dr. Mawhinney: Mechanisms already exist to check eligibility for prescription charge exemption and charge remission under the national health service low income scheme. The adequacy and operation of these arrangements is kept under review.

"Making London Better"

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has of the cost of implementation of "Making London Better" for 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the House on 16 February, there will be some £158·5 million funding for changes in London in 1993-94. An additional £43·5 million will be available for investment on improving primary and community health services, together with £105 million for changes in secondary care. We will also provide £10 million to ease waiting times in London.

Thames Regional Health Authority

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total activity levels in the Thames regional health authority for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The number of finished consultant episodes in the general and acute specialties purchased in the four Thames regions in 1991-92 was 1,958,681. The corresponding number forecast for 1992-93 is 2,025,474.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 153, if she will show for each trust into which band the chairman's salary falls.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 12 February 1993]: This information is not held centrally for national health service trusts in the first wave. These details can be obtained from the individual trusts. Remuneration bands for the second and third wave are as follows:

Private Hospitals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent in the last five years by district health authorities and regional health authorities on purchasing services from private hospitals.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent on the purchase of private health care for NHS patients in 1991-92 and the first three quarters of the financial year 1992-93; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 15 February 1993]: The annual accounts and financial returns of health authorities do not separately identify expenditure incurred specifically on the purchase of private health care. However, the summarised accounts of health authorities in England for 1991-92 show that the total of health care and related services purchased from all non-national health service providers was some £182·3 million.

This figure will include expenditure incurred under contracts with variously constituted nursing homes and hospices, voluntary organisations, local authorities and military hospitals in addition to those with private hospitals as such. Similar information is not collected on a quarterly basis.

Optometry

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what Government funding is made available annually towards the cost of the training course for optometry.

Mr. Boswell: I have been asked to reply.

Funding for subjects and professions allied to medicine, including optometry, is the responsibility of the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council. The UFC's teaching unit of resource for funded places in subjects allied to medicine is £4,614 in 1992-93. The PCFC's mean funding per full-time funded place in its health and social services programme is £3,079 in 1992-93. These categories cover different subjects and are not directly comparable. Funded places for optometry are not separately identified. It is for institutions to decide actual spending on each subject.

Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to appointing a replacement chairman for the study on the links between the development of cancer and exposure to occupational radiation.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The study in question is funded by the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant in aid from my Department.

The MRC's environmental epidemiology unit is conducting a programme of research on occupational and environmental hazards. Included in this programme is the study to follow up the findings of an association between the risk of leukaemia and lymphoma and the father's occupational exposure to radiation. The director of the unit is Professor David Barker.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Infrastructure (Private Investment)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has had from private business to his invitation on 9 December 1992 to come forward with proposals for private sector investment in Britain's infrastructure.

Mr. Dorrell: Numerous firms in the financial and construction sectors have put ideas to the Treasury, either in writing or in discussion with Ministers or officials.

Beer Duty

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has had about the compliance costs for small brewers of the new collection system for beer duty; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what estimate he has of the compliance costs to the United Kingdom brewing industry arising from the requirements proposed in the Customs and Excise draft notice 226 on a new collection system for beer duty.

Sir John Cope: Studies when the change was under consideration indicated that end product duty would reduce compliance costs for brewers. A study of the costs of the new system has been commissioned but it is too early to estimate the results. Small brewers have generally welcomed the changeover to an end product duty and none has made representations about the cost of compliance.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of a windfall tax on United Kingdom companies on employment and on prices.

Mr. Dorrell: The precise impact of such a tax would depend on what form it took, but any increase in business taxation would be likely to impede job creation. Furthermore, the Government believe that excess profits should be avoided by encouraging competition and providing effective regulation of monopolies. We do not believe that excess profits should be tolerated in order to provide extra taxable capacity.

Inland Revenue (Privatisation)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will continue to require Inland Revenue staff to sign the Official Secrets Act when the work is put into private agencies.

Mr. Dorrell: All Inland Revenue staff and staff of contractors working for the Department who have access to information about taxpayers are, and will continue to be, required to sign an acknowledgement that improper disclosure may lead to imprisonment for up to two years, or a fine or both.

Privatisation

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to arrange the sales of British Coal, Caledonian MacBrayne, Channel Four Television Company, Commonwealth Development Corporation, Covent Garden Market Authority, English Industrial Estates Corporation and Welsh Fourth Channel Authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government remain committed to the privatisation of British Coal. However, no decisions on the form or timing of privatisation will be taken until after the coal review White Paper has been debated. The future status of the Commonwealth Development Corporation is currently under review. Ministers have announced their intention to dispose of the assets of the Covent Garden market authority as soon as practicable. There are no current plans to privatise Caledonian MacBrayne or English Industrial Estates Corporation. Channel Four and Welsh Channel Four are private sector bodies.

Value Added Tax

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out the nature and extent of the obligations taken on by the United Kingdom in respect of its zero rates for VAT on 24 June 1991, and on 27 June 1992.

Sir John Cope: At the meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers Council on 24 June 1991 the member states including the United Kingdom agreed that under transitional arrangements member states which at 1 January 1991 applied for zero rates for VAT to particular goods and services in accordance with the provisions of Community law in force, would have the option of retaining them.

The transitional period will continue at least until the end of the 1996 and thereafter until there is unanimous agreement on the definitive (origin) VAT system to operate after that. The United Kingdom has made clear that such agreement will not be forthcoming unless, among other conditions, our right to continue with our zero rates is fully protected.

No obligations were taken on by the United Kingdom in respect of its zero rates for VAT on 27 June 1992.

Drug Smuggling

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the information concerned with drug smuggling sent to the Attorney-General since 7 February by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 19 February 1993]: I understand from the Attorney-General's Department that it has no record of having received any such correspondence.

Friendly Societies Commission

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the criteria he applies when appointing members of the Friendly Societies Commission; and if he will list the relevant experience and professional qualifications of its current members.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The factors which the Treasury takes into account in making appointments to the Friendly Societies Commission include: the requirement for a mix of relevant skills and experience; the need to ensure that there are no conflicts of interest which might prevent prospective commissioners from carrying out their statutory duties; the importance of having a commission which can work as a team; and the need for enough commissioners to carry out the commission's statutory functions.

The relevant experience and professional qualifications of the current commissioners is:

Mr. D. W. Lee (Chairman)

Full-time civil servant for last four years. Registrar of Friendly societies since December 1989. Formerly with Lloyds Bank and Barclays; Director of various companies in financial services and other sectors. Fellow of the Chartered Institute of Bankers, with a degree in law, LL.B (Hons.) London.

Mr. P. E. Couse, FCA

Retired Chartered Accountant. Formerly partner, Coopers and Lybrand and President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants.

Mr. F. da Rocha

Civil servant for 24 years (18 years in the Registry of Friendly Societies).

Dr. J. Dine

Barrister. Reader in Law at Essex University, with a doctorate in law.

Mr. J. A. Geddes

Actuary—Fellow of the Institute of Actuaries (retired). Formerly partner, R. Watson and Sons.

Mr. A. Wilson

Retired Civil Servant—formerly Registrar of Friendly Societies—and a qualified solicitor.

Brian Charrington

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the release of Brian Charrington, arrested on a charge connected to the illegal import of cocaine, at the Manchester magistrates court in January.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 19 February 1993] On counsel's advice the Commissioners of Customs and Excise agreed that the proper course of action was to drop the prosecution against Mr. Charrington on the basis that the evidence against him would not secure a conviction.

SCOTLAND

Legal Aid

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the claims made by solicitors for payment by the legal aid fund in 1991-92 were settled within one month.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of accounts submitted under each category of legal aid in 1991-92, and the percentage paid within one month, are as follows:

	Number	Per cent. paid within one month
Civil legal aid	21,015	35·4
Criminal legal aid	61,777	61·0
Advice and assistance	209,043	47·4
TOTAL	291,835	49·5

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons received help under the legal aid advice and assistance scheme with a nil contribution in the latest year for which figures are available; what percentage this was of the total number receiving advice under the scheme; and what he estimates that percentage would have been if the changes in eligibility for civil legal aid had been in effect in that year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 February 1993]: In 1991-92, 271,759 grants were made under the advice and assistance scheme. Of these, approximately 980 per cent. (244,000) had no contribution to pay.

Since there would have been no contributory band, the number of grants would have been smaller had the proposed changes in legal aid eligibility announced on 16 November been in force in 1991-92. All of those who qualified for assistance would have received it free of contributions.

Fishermen

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deep sea and inshore fishermen were employed full time in Scotland in (a) 1972, (b) 1982 and (c) 1992.

Sir Hector Monro: The number of fishermen regularly employed in Scotland in each of the years requested are as follows. Separate figures for inshore and deep sea fishermen are not available. Part-time fishermen and crofters are excluded from the figures.

Fishermen regularly employed in Scotland

Year	Number
1972	8,110
1982	7,24[illegible]
1992	[1]7,1[illegible]

Nurse Gradings

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of appeals against nurse clinical grading are outstanding in each of the health boards and at the national level.

Mr. Stewart: I understand that virtually no nurse clinical grading appeals submitted under section 32 of the General Whitley Council conditions of service are outstanding at health board level. On 1 February 1993 there were 729 appeals to the Scottish Appeals Committee outstanding. On the same date 586 appeals at national level remitted by the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council to the Scottish appeal team secretariat were outstanding; the breakdown of these by health board is given in the table.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to designate further areas within Scotland as environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 19 February 1993]: Five areas selected for further designation as environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland were announced by my hon. Friend, Lord Strathclyde, on 6 March 1992 and will be introduced during 1993. They are the Argyll Islands, the Cairngorms Straths, the Central Southern Uplands, the Shetland Islands and the Western Southern Uplands. There are, at present, no plans to designate any further areas in Scotland.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total area within Scotland currently designated as environmentally sensitive areas; and what is the total size of the additional areas whose designation comes into effect on 1 April.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 19 February 1993]: The total area currently designated in Scotland as environmentally sensitive area is 288,000 hectares. This area will be increased by a further 1,098,000 hectares when the third round of environmentally sensitive areas is implemented during 1993.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what percentage his Department's budget for payments to farmers in environmentally sensitive areas is due to change in 1993-94.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 19 February 1993]: The provision for environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland for the financial year 1993-94 is £5·3 million. This is an increase of approximately 36 per cent. over that for 1992-93.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what date he expects all contracted-status ambulances to be phased out within the Highlands; and how much money has been made available for such purposes since such a policy was instituted.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 19 February 1993]: It is the policy of the Scottish ambulance service to phase out the use of ambulance contractors where demand justifies such a change and where it would be economical to do so. No specific date has been set, but the position is kept under review.

Mineral Rights

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the sites owned or formerly owned by the Forestry Commission where mineral rights have been sold in each of the last 10 years, giving the name of the site, the country in which it is located, and the amount received for the sale of those rights; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The Forestry Commission does not sell mineral rights; it grants licences and leases permitting the extraction of minerals, subject to the licensee or lessee obtaining planning permission. Details of individual licences and leases are not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The Forestry Commission has received over £5 million from these licences and leases in the last 10 years.

Scottish Students

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish students are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time education within the United Kingdom.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The available information is given in the table. Full information is available for Scottish students in Scotland. No information is available for Scottish students on courses of further education outside Scotland, nor for those on part-time courses of higher education outside Scotland. The figures for Scottish students on full-time courses outside Scotland include only those studying in the traditional university sector in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, and those studying part-time in Scotland are assumed to be Scots-domiciled.

Scottish Domiciled Students in 1991-92

	Full-time	Part-time
Higher education in Scotland	80,036	43,010
Higher education elsewhere in United Kingdom	3,462	n.a.

Higher Education

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students have been in (a) full-time and (b) part-time higher education in Scotland in each year since 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The information requested is given in the table. The table includes figures for all higher education institutions which will be funded by the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council from April this year. The figures given are for students on courses of higher education; in addition, some of the institutions have some students undertaking courses of further education.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time students have attended each separate higher education institute in Scotland in each year since 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The information requested is given in the table. 1991-92 is the latest year for which figures are available. The figures exclude students studying with the Open university. Sandwich students are included in the full-time figures. Part-time in-service teacher training students are excluded from the part-time figures.

Student Grants

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish students receive a full grant for (a) living at home and (b) living away from home.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: As at 17 February 1993, the number of Scottish students who had been offered a full grant at the home rate for session 1992-93 was 10,775, of whom 469 subsequently withdrew. A further 27,162 were offered a full grant at the away from home rate, of whom 1,087 subsequently withdrew.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner fund holders within Lanarkshire health board have applied for and been granted fund holding status.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 January 1993]: Latest information received from Lanarkshire health board indicates that 14 practices have applied to become fund holders and have been granted formal approval by the board. Eight of these practices will commence fund holding from 1 April 1993. The other six will commence as soon as practicable.

Overseas Trade

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to encourage trade between Scotland and (a) Australia, (b) Canada, (c) New Zealand and (d) the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 February 1993]: My right hon. Friend established Scottish Trade International in December 1991 in order to offer Scottish companies one-door access to the wide range of export services and assistance available from the Scottish Office and Scottish Enterprise. These include the Government's overseas trade services (OTS) which STI promote and administer in Scotland on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry. OTS can assist companies enter the markets of Australia, Canada, New Zealand and the USA. Complementing OTS, STI has its own north American business development programme.

In addition, particular events and promotions are planned. This month STI is co-operating with the Australia and New Zealand Trade Advisory Committee in the organisation of a seminar on the Australian and New Zealand markets. STI will also participate in a campaign to be launched in March which will aim to increase sales into the north American market.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance is given to health boards on the European Acquired Rights directive 77/187 in relation to compulsory competitive tendering; and what plans he has to issue further guidance.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 February 1993]: The existing guidance to health boards on competitive tendering does not specifically refer to the 1977 directive. However health boards have been advised to consult the central legal office where they are uncertain about the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 which are derived from this directive.

Further guidance on best practice and procedures for market testing will be issued to health boards in the near future in line with the Government's White Paper "Competing for Quality" (Cmnd. 1730).

Fish Landings

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total landings of (a) haddock, (b) whiting, (c) cod and (d) monkfish at each Scottish port in January; and if he will list the corresponding figures for the same month for each of the past five years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 February 1993]: Figures for January 1993 are still too incomplete to alow meaningful comparisons with earlier years. Reasonably firm figures should be available by 25 February. As soon as possible thereafter I will arrange for copies of all the figures to be placed in the Library and I will send a set to the hon. Member.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) burglaries of a dwelling, (b) burglaries other than of a dwelling and (c) burglaries in total were reported (i) in each police force area and (ii) in total for Scotland in each calendar year since 1979, and in the 12 months ended June 1992.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The available information collected centrally for calendar years 1979-1991, was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish) on 3 February 1993 at column 231.

The available information collected centrally, for the 12 months ended June 1992, is given in the table.

Number of cases of housebreaking[1] recorded by the police in Scotland, 12 months ended June 1992

Police Force	12 months to June 1992[2]

Police Overtime

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure on overtime for the police force in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole in each of the past four years; and what is the estimated expenditure for overtime in 1992-93.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 February 1993]: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Year	Strathclyde £	Scotland £
1988-89	12,819,000	21,588,000
1989-90	14,407,000	24,517,000

Private Roads

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the ways by which individuals may challenge, or seek to change, the status of a road which is held by the local roads authority to be a private road in terms of the the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984 in circumstances where there is evidence that the road in question should be a public road in terms of the 1984 Act.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The procedures by which individuals may seek to change the status of a private road to a public road, for which a local roads authority would have responsibility, is set out in section 16 of the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984. Briefly this obliges the local roads authority to adopt a private road, on request, where the road is of a satisfactory standard in accordance with that authority's requirements. This section of the Act makes provision for any disputes to be determined by arbitration by a single arbiter, appointed in default of agreement by the sheriff on application by either party.

Additionally section 1(4) of the 1984 Act gives authorities a discretionary power to add roads to their list of public roads. An individual with sufficient title and interest in the matter may challenge the acts or omissions of a local roads authority in the discharge of its functions, with respect to the inclusion or exclusion of a road in its list of public roads, by means of an application to the Court of Session for judicial review.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the aims and duties of each branch of the Forestry Commission; and what plans he has to split the two branches of the Forestry Commission into separate organisations.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The Forestry Commission carried out an internal reorganisation in April 1992 to distinguish clearly between its functions as a Government Department (the Department of Forestry) and its role in managing publicly owned forests (Forest Enterprise). The Department of Forestry comprises a policy and resources group and the Forestry Authority.

The policy and resources group is responsible for providing support to forestry Ministers on parliamentary matters, developing and monitoring forestry policy, dealing with European and international forestry matters, and providing central services for the commission as a whole.

The Forestry Authority is responsible for administering the commission's grant schemes for private woodlands, controlling the felling of trees and woods, administering regulations to prevent the introduction of potentially harmful forest pests and diseases, and conducting research. These functions are carried out with the aim of ensuring that trees, woodlands and forests in Great Britain are protected, managed, extended and promoted in ways which best serve the public interest in accordance with Government policy.

Forest Enterprise is responsible for managing the commission's estate in Great Britain as a multi-use resource for recreation, wildlife, landscape and conservation, as well as for timber production. This is done with the aim of creating and maintaining attractive and productive woodlands and managing them for public benefits.

The Government have no plans at present to split the two parts of the Forestry Commission into separate organisations.

Potatoes

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any details on the number of times other EC member states' Governments have intervened in their domestic potato market in each year since 1988; and what was the tonnage and cost.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 February 1993]: The information is not available.

Mitsubishi

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the negotiations taking place with Mitsubishi in respect of its proposed semi-conductor plant; and what account is being taken of offers of assistance being made by other countries.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 February 1993]: Discussions that my officials may have with individual companies are held on a commercial in confidence basis.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington can expect a reply to his letter of 21 December 1992 about the operations of the Benefits Agency attenance allowance unit at Norcross, Blackpool, the disability benefits centre, Birmingham and the disability living allowance unit at Warbeck house, Blackpool.

Mr. Scott: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 22 February 1993.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to advertise his Department's policy on compensation and to take steps to identify and inform claimants who might be entitled to compensation, either because they have waited over 12 months to hear the outcome of a disability living allowance or attendance allowance claim or because an existing award has been interrupted for longer than three months; and what is the total number of cases where compensation has already been awarded by his Department on either of these grounds.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 22 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, about his plans to advertise his Department's policy on compensation, and to take steps to identify and inform claimants of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) or attendance Allowance (AA) who might be entitled to compensation and the total number of cases where compensation has been awarded.

There are no plans for specific advertising of the Department's policy on compensation. The Benefits Agency Customer Charter informs people that a payment can be considered if someone suffers financial loss as a result of our mistake and it guides customers to make contact with their local customer service manager.

The staff at the DLA Unit are aware of the compensation arrangements and we regularly remind staff about the procedure for identifying and referring cases for compensation.

Up to the 18 February 1993, one hundred and forty-two (142) DLA customers and two (2) AA customers received such compensation payments.

I hope you find this rreply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested for the years 1992-93 and 1991-92 can be obtained from the DSS management consultancy contracts, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department of Social Security has awarded 127 management consultancy contracts in 1991-92 and 126 to date in 1992-93.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the regulations regarding availability for work and actively seeking work in the social security regulations so as to encourage those on unemployment benefit to seek work experience in the voluntary sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Unemployed people can take part in voluntary work as long as they are available for, and actively seeking, work. Within these conditions there are no set limits on the amount of voluntary work that they can do.

These conditions also include easements for volunteers whereby volunteers may be allowed 24 hours' notice in which to make the necessary arrangements to give up or rearrange voluntary responsibilities before taking up an offer of employment. Voluntary workers attending work camps away from their home area may be deemed to be available for work for a period of 14 days in any year.

The adjudicating authorities will look positively at the time spent on voluntary work when deciding whether a person has taken reasonable steps to find work.

We are considering measures to help the long-term unemployed to use their time constructively in a range of activities including voluntary work.

EMPLOYMENT

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she will make a statement on the future of the construction industry training board.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am pleased to announce that the review of the construction industry training board has now been completed.

While it remains Government policy that sector training arrangements should normally be non-statutory, the Government are persuaded that different considerations apply in the building and civil engineering industries. My right hon. Friend has therefore decided that the CITB will be reconstituted as a statutory training board for a five-year period with effect from 1 May 1993.

Disabled People (Special Schemes)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places will be available in 1993-94 in the special schemes provided by the Employment Service for people with disabilities; what changes are planned in those programmes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Service's special assistance schemes for people with disabilities provide a wide range of help to overcome different kinds of problems faced by disabled people in obtaining and retaining employment. It is not possible to predict with precision the numbers of people with disabilities who will be helped or the kind of help they will need. However, in 1993-94, it is forecast that 13,140 grants to people with disabilities will be made under the main three schemes—special aids to employment, adaptations to premises and equipment and help with fares to work.

The Employment Service's planned expenditure for 1993-94 on special schemes for people with disabilities is £14·8 million.

The special schemes for people with disabilities are currently under review; an announcement about their future development will be made as soon as possible.

Trade Unions (Training)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money is paid to trade unions for training.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 December 1992, Official Report, columns 254-55.

Chemical Manufacturing Sites

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to review the regulations and guidance on the design and location of control rooms and office accommodation at chemical manufacturing sites in the light of the explosion in September 1992 at Hickson and Welch of Castleford.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 22 September 1992 the Health and Safety Commission directed the Health and Safety Executive, under section 14(2) of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, to hold a formal investigation into the incident at Hickson and Welch and to make a report. Once this has been concluded, the Health and Safety Executive will decide what action may then be appropriate.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many non-manual workers are unemployed on the basis used in the answer given on 30 October 1992, Official Report, column 911; and what percentage of the work force this represents.

Mr. McLoughlin: The most recent figures from the summer, June to August, 1992 Labour Force Survey show 822,000—not seasonally adjusted—non-manual workers unemployed on the internationally agreed ILO definition. This represented 5·4 per cent. of all economically active non-manual workers in Great Britain.

Jobcentres

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) casual staff, (b) temporary staff and (c) permanent staff she plans to shed from jobcentres; and if she will list the locations of the jobcentres affected.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Richard Burden, dated 23 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the adjustment of staffing levels in Job Centres. This is something which falls within responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I must point out that the level of our workforce regularly fluctuates during the year to reflect local circumstances and seasonal trends in unemployment. Casual and temporary employees are always told that their appointments may be terminated at short notice, according to the local needs of the Employment Service.

We have no plans to cut the overall annual number of people employed to provide our services. Indeed, next year will see an increase in the number of people employed to provide our customers with a range of services to help them return to work. In 1993-94, we are funding our regions to employ some 47,800 people compared with some 44,500 at the start of 1992-93. This illustrates our firm commitment to meeting our clients needs.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, the Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Workers (Social Rights)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to improve the availability in the United Kingdom of the second report of the European Commission on the application of the Community charter on fundamental social rights for workers; and what is the current price of the document.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The report in question is a Commission publication. In the United Kingdom the main agent for Commission documents is HMSO. The price of the report is £49·60. A copy of the report is available in the Library. The report can also be consulted free of charge at any of the four Commission offices, 47 European documentation centres or 26 European information centres in the United Kingdom.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 430, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Curry: This Department's forecast outturn for paid publicity for 1992-93 is £4·5 million. Planned paid publicity expenditure for 1993-94 has been set at £4·8 million.

Pay Rates

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to retain the statutory basis for the system for determining pay in agriculture.

Mr. Curry: The agricultural minimum pay arrangements are scheduled for review later this year. On the basis of the outcome of the review, Agriculture Ministers will decide on the future of these arrangements, including their statutory basis.

Pesticides

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available a freephone line for complaints and inquiries about toxic incidents involving pesticides.

Mr. Soames: The Health and Safety Executive is preparing a free leaflet for the general public explaining how to report incidents involving pesticides. The draft will be issued for external consultation shortly with a view to publication by the summer.

A freephone is available for reporting wildlife-related incidents. There are at present no plans to extend this facility.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines he has given to the Health and Safety Executive concerning dealing with complaints of ill effects stemming from pesticide handling.

Mr. Soames: The Department has not given the Health and Safety Executive any guidelines concerning dealing with complaints of ill effects stemming from pesticide handling. Procedures for dealing with such complaints are a matter for the Health and Safety Executive.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the number of staff and contracted consultants that will be required in the United Kingdom to administer schemes under the reformed common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: Information on administration—staff numbers and running costs—for MAFF and the Intervention Board is set out in the departmental report on the Government's expenditure plans 1993-94 to 1995-96 which was published earlier this month. A copy has been placed in the Library. It is not possible to allocate a figure to the number of departmental staff purely working on duties connected with the common agricultural policy, including the reformed schemes, as the work of the Department is not recorded in a way which would enable the extraction of this figure without disproportionate cost. Almost all the staff in the Intervention Board executive agency, approximately 1,000, are directly involved in administering schemes under the CAP. Furthermore the Agriculture Departments in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland also have responsibilities for certain CAP schemes. It is possible that contracted consultants may be employed to deal with some of the work involved with the CAP. The extent of such involvement has not yet been decided.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what would be the effect on the level of sheep annual premium of movements in the pound sterling/ecu exchange rate in the coming year to (a) 1·20 ecu, (b) 1·25 ecu or (c) 1·30 ecu.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 22 February, Official Report, columns 472-73.

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide figures for the reduction in numbers of posts as a result of contracting out since 1979 in his Department and agencies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Curry: In considering the effect on staff numbers a distinction has to be made between contracting out work previously carried out in-house and the contracting out of new work for which in-house staff would otherwise have had to be employed. Moreover, changes in workload in other areas may mean that staff from a contracted-out area are redeployed elsewhere without any overall reduction in numbers.

Since 1979 it is estimated that some 240 posts have been lost as a direct result of contracting out, but that potential increases of several hundred staff have also been avoided.

Abattoirs

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate his Department has made of the number of abattoirs that cannot afford to meet current meat hygiene regulations which will cease business in the next two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Any premises which could not comply with the structural requirements of the regulations on 1 January was able to apply for aid temporary derogation to enable it to continue to operate whilst it upgraded. These derogations may last until 31 December 1995, some four and a half years after the EC directive was published. My right hon. Friend the Minister and I have ensured that the regulations have been interpreted as flexibly and sensibly as possible without compromising hygiene.

So far some 544 slaughterhouses in the United Kingdom have applied for temporary derogations for varying times. We believe the applicants are committed to upgrading their structure and would expect them to have made adequate financial provision to finance the work. We have not been advised by any of them that they intended ceasing business in the next two years.

Levels of veterinary inspection are now considerably less than abattoirs would have expected them to be when they were drawing up their temporary derogation applications. We would expect the associated costs to have been a significant consideration in their financial projections.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will apply the criteria of the deregulation initiative to hygiene regulations governing abattoirs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend the Minister and I have sought always to ensure that the EC red meat directive has not been interpreted in Great Britain in an over-zealous or over-regulatory manner. We are both well seized of the need to apply the Fresh Meat Regulations pragmatically and sensitively; balancing the essential requirement of maintaining public confidence in the integrity of the food supply against the equally important responsibility to ensure that excessive burdens are not imposed on industry.

Departmental Fishery Vessels

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the vessels and tonnage of vessel owned or operated by his Department; and which are registered on the United Kingdom fishery register.

Mr. Curry: There are two vessels owned, and operated, by this Ministry on the fishing vessels register, namely research vessels Corystes of 1,280 gross registered tonnes and Cirolana of 1,759 gross registered tonnes, both engaged in fishery research and monitoring work.

Flooding

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 783, to the hon. Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Hawkins) on high tides in March, if he will now reconsider his policy on an evacuation exercise in the eastern counties set out in his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 509.

Mr. Curry: No. The points made in my answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 509, remain valid.

DEFENCE

Ozone-depleting Chemicals

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. Aitken: Only a few critical applications of the ozone depleting substances within the Department are considered essential. These applications were rigorously selected in accordance with international criteria.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC Regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Mr. Aitken: Current EC regulations govern the supply of ozone-depleting substances, through production and consumption controls, to the market. No constraints are placed, other than by supply, on users such as the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-depleting chemicals in use by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: The Department has sought and received guidance on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-depleting substances it employs from a wide range of sources both at home and abroad. These include commercial specialists, Government Departments and agencies, consultants and British and foreign service users.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances become controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Aitken: All those ozone-depleting substances consumed by this Department, once removed from their existing systems, become Controlled Waste under Section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within departmental buildings.

Mr. Aitken: Most of the applications using such chemicals will be converted to use non-ozone-depleting alternatives. Any material withdrawn will be recycled.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within his Department and returned to the manufacturer.

Mr. Aitken: The Department returns ozone-depleting substances to suppliers for recycling under a number of individual supply and maintenance contracts. Information on the quantities transferred could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much funding has been allocated or spent to specifically deal with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Aitken: The cost of our programme to phase out usage of ozone-depleting substances is being evaluated. However, £10 million has already been allocated for recycling and banking.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within his Department's buildings in the last five years.

Mr. Aitken: Releases of ozone-depleting substances to the atmosphere have been monitored by my Department for the past three years. No major releases have been reported over that period.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere.

Mr. Aitken: It is this Department's policy to prevent emissions of ozone-depleting substances to the atmosphere during maintenance, servicing, decommissioning and disposal. This is achieved through a wide range of measures, including the use of reclamation equipment and the provision of secondary seals.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in the Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by the Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use.

Mr. Aitken: It is my Department's policy that all ozone-depleting substances when no longer required are treated as controlled waste, and disposed of in an environmentally acceptable manner.

Fire Extinguishers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. Aitken: It would require a disproportionate cost and effort to establish the number of hand held Halon fire extinguishers currently in my Department's buildings. My Department has a programme to replace these fire extinguishers with non-ozone-depleting alternatives; withdrawn material will be recycled.

Ozone Layer (Protection)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the Departmental Green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; and which possible measures have been considered and rejected, and on what grounds.

Mr. Aitken: This Department's major protection initiatives include the cessation of venting to atmosphere and a programme to phase out uses of ozone-depleting substances. Only those critical uses which cannot be substituted will continue to be supported for a limited period.

Refrigerators

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many CFC domestic fridges are contained within his Department's buildings.

Mr. Aitken: There is no central register of domestic fridges held in departmental buildings. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give an undertaking to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain CFCs or HCFCs for his Department.

Mr. Aitken: Domestic fridges are replaced on an individual basis to the prevailing commercial standards. Bulk food storage facilities are to be redesigned to comply with the latest EC food storage requirements, and use of a non-ozone-depleting substance will be specified.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

CFCs and HCFCs

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the latest available figures are for his Department's total purchase of CFCs and HCFCs.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be provided without disproportionate cost and effort. However, a total of 114,300 kgs of CFCs and HCFCs have been procured through contracts let by my Department since January 1992.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many CFC and HCFC installations are contained within his Department's buildings.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Asbestos (Compensation Claims)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel who served with the Royal Navy during the second world war have made successful claims for compensation as a result of exposure to asbestos.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Submarines

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to extend the subfacts scheme into the Minches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is planned to extend the subfacts scheme to cover the Minches and the Sea of Hebrides. At present, we are considering, in consultation with the chief coastguard and others, the detailed practical arrangements for the operation of the scheme in these areas. An announcement will be made as soon as these arrangements have been decided.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to alter the code of conduct for submarines following the Lupina incident in September 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We shall consider whether changes to the arrangements governing the conduct of dived submarine operations in waters frequented by fishing vessels are warranted once the report by the United States authorities into the incident has been received and studied.

Armaments Exports

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the amount of military armaments exported by the United Kingdom in each year since 1979; what percentage was exported to (a) Africa, (b) Asia, (c) central America and (d) south America in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: A breakdown of the total value of defence exports by geographical region for 1975, 1980 and between 1985 and 1991 is given in the "Defence Statistics 1992 Edition", table 1.12, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Military Land Byelaws

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many persons have been prosecuted under military land byelaws at (a) Fylingdales, (b) Molesworth, (c) Lakenheath, (d) Mildenhall, (e) Burghfield and (f) Aldermaston in (i) 1990, (ii) 1991 and (iii) 1992; what signs are displayed on this land warning citizens that byelaws will be enforced; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many persons were arrested under Her Majesty's Forest Moor and Menwith Hill station byelaws 1986 in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992; how many such persons were convicted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member.

Surplus Equipment

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current arrangements for disposal of his Department's equipment which is surplus to requirements; how decisions about which equipment is surplus are arrived at; who decides on the arrangements for disposal; what procedures there are for fixing reserve prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Decisions on whether equipment is surplus to my Department's requirements take into account the required levels of spares holdings and the defence equipment programme. Authority for day-to-day decisions rests with the appropriate service commodity and supply manager in consultation with the technical and engineering authorities and operational sponsors. The directorate of sales (disposals) arrange sales of surplus equipment through Government-to-Government and Government-to-industry contracts, competitive tenders and public auctions. These take into account the type and condition of the equipment and the available market opportunities. Sales prices are determined by competition. Auction reserve prices are based on a technical assessment by the directorate's staff of expected saleability. Unsold and unsellable items are disposed of under waste contract arrangements.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 24 February 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

High Court Judges

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he received a copy of the Kennedy working party report on High Court judges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The report was received by the Lord Chancellor on 10 February 1993.

Legal Aid

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he will publish the advice given to the Lord Chancellor by the Legal Aid Advisory Committee on his proposed changes in legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Advisory Committee has itself already made public its advice to the Lord Chancellor on the proposed eligibility changes and the Lord Chancellor's response to its advice. I have placed copies of the correspondence in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Communities (Amendment) Bill

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the legal issues in connection with the European Communities (Amendment) Bill on which he has made public statements, indicating on which of them he sought advice from (a) his Department's lawyers, (b) Crown Law Officers and (c) European Court legal advisers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have taken legal advice from various sources during the passage of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill. It is neither customary nor appropriate for me to reveal these sources.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether legal advice was sought before 20 January on the effects of amending the European Communities (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Yes.

Whitehead Detention Camp, Hong Kong

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many reported incidents there have been of (a) total number of crimes reported, (b) murders, (c) attempts to escape, (d) incidents of rape, (e) incidents of child sex abuse, (f) drug abuse, (g) abortions and (h) suicides for each year at the Whitehead detention camp in Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: The figures for 1991 and 1992 are as follows:

	1991	1992
(a) Total number of crimes reported	844	588
(b) Murder cases	4	4
(c) Escapes	419	263
(d) Rape cases reported	2	2
(e) Reports of sex abuse	0	0
(f) Arrests involving dangerous drugs	5	7
(g) Illegal abortions	0	0
(h) Suicides	[1]0	1

[1] And two attempts.

Population of Whitehead Detention Centre

	Number
1 January 1991	22,528
1 January 1992	24,856

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department during 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Goodlad: The following was spent on entertainment by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration:

1991-92	5,700,606
[1]1992-93	3,943,940

[1] To date.

Angola

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support mandatory sanctions against UNITA, including the banning of all lethal and non-lethal supplies and all flights to and from UNITA-controlled areas of Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Resolution 804, adopted by the United Nations Security Council on 29 January, urged members to cease the supply of lethal material to any Angolan party. We keep the situation under review, but do not believe that mandatory sanctions could be effectively applied against UNITA.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts he is making to promote the ending of the current conflict in Angola through the implementation of the peace accords which were agreed with the Angolan Government on 31 May 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government fully support United Nations efforts to promote dialogue between the Government of Angola and UNITA with a view to agreeing a ceasefire and full implementation of the Bicesse peace accords. With our EC partners, we have urged UNITA to agree a date for a further meeting with the Government of Angola to be held under United Nations auspices in Addis Ababa, and to agree to a truce in the besieged city of Huambo.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of (a) the treatment of ethnic and political minorities in Kenya and (b) other aspects of the present human rights situation; and what advice he has given to the Kenyan Government about the necessary human rights provisions in Kenya for the continued provision of aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have expressed concern at the highest levels over recent renewed outbreaks of ethnic clashes and have stressed the importance of the Kenyan Government providing security for all Kenyan citizens. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has also raised concerns over Kenya's human rights performance, a key factor which Her Majesty's Government take into account when allocating aid.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the European Community observer mission in South Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The European Community observer mission in South Africa—ECOMSA—is making a valuable contribution to defusing violence and reducing tensions. ECOMSA, together with the Commonwealth team, has been particularly praised for its professionalism, and has rapidly built extensive relations with, for example, local political organisations, peace accord structures and the South African police. They have the advantage of comprising several senior serving police officers with experience in, for example, community policing.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the terms of reference of the European Community observer mission in South Africa; what is the period of the mandate of the mission; what is the size of the mission; what is the number of members from each EC member state; and in which areas of South Africa it is operating.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The European Community observer mission in South Africa was deployed in accordance with the terms of Security Council resolution 772 to work in association with other international observer groups and the structures of the national peace accord as part of their efforts to reduce tension and end violence.

The mission was initially deployed for six months, with effect from October 1992, and comprises 15 members contributed from member states as follows:

	Number
United Kingdom	2
Denmark	2
France	1
Germany	2
Greece	1
Ireland	2
Netherlands	2
Portugal	1
EC Commission	2

The EC observers are at present deployed with six members at the ECOMSA headquarters in Johannesberg, four members in Durban and two members in East London and Cape Town respectively.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are to extend the period of the mandate of the European Community observer mission in South Africa beyond the current expiry date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This is under consideration among the Twelve. A decision is expected shortly.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made for the European Community observer mission in South Africa to report to (a) the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, (b) the Council of Ministers, (c) the structures of European political co-operation, (d) the Commission of the European Communities, (e) the European Parliament and (f) the national parliaments of the member states of the European Community.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Regular reports are submitted to the presidency. These are made available for discussion as necessary by European Community Foreign Ministers. They are also circulated to all member states and can be drawn on to inform their parliaments as appropriate.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recommendations the European Community observer mission in South Africa has made to (a) the presidency and (b) the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: To date, the reports of the European Community observer mission in South Africa have been factual commentaries on the situation and about action engaged in by team members.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which dates the Council of Ministers has discussed the question of the European Community observer mission to South Africa since October 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This matter has not been discussed by the Council of Ministers since October 1992.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration the Council of Ministers has given to the possibility of expanding the European Community observer mission to South Africa and extending its mandate when agreement is reached on the calling of one person one vote elections.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This question has not yet been considered by the Council of Ministers. Any election-monitoring mission would be different in nature, and would probably have to operate separately, from the current observer exercise.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom citizens are currently attached to (a) the United Nations observer mission to South Africa, (b) the European Community observer mission to South Africa, (c) the Commonwealth observer group to South Africa and (d) the Goldstone commission.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are three United Kingdom citizens currently serving with the United Nations observer mission to South Africa, two with the European Community observer mission, one with the Commonwealth observer group to South Africa, and one with the Goldstone commission.

TRANSPORT

Suffolk Railways

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the money to be spent on (a) safety and (b) capital investment by regional railways in Suffolk in the next financial year.

Mr. Freeman: The disaggregation of expenditure at this level is a matter for British Rail. It is for BR to determine what safety-related expenditure is required in each area and how the available capital investment resources should be shared out.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following contracts were awarded by the Department of Transport:

(i) THE PAST 12 MONTHS:

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following consultancy contracts, including management consultancies, were awarded by the Department of Transport over:

(a) Last 12 months: 298 and (b) 1991-92: 288.

In the case of both (a) and (b) the majority of contracts are in the general and research areas—management consultancy contracts are not a high proportion of the total numbers.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, columns 510-11, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The current estimated outturn for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 by my Department is £8·78 million. The 1993-94 estimates will be considered by Parliament on 9 March, after which budgets will be published. The budget for 1993-94 is expected to be in line with 1992-93 expenditure in real terms. These estimates do not include publicity expenditure by the Department's executive agencies.

Cyclists

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will introduce a public campaign on the need for cyclists to have both a front and rear light when riding a pedal cycle during the hours of darkness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department is planning to launch a cycling safety campaign in March and our publicity material will include advice on the use of lights by cyclists.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to introduce to stop motorists driving too close to motor cyclists and pedal cyclists.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Advice to motorists to give cyclists plenty of room is contained in the "Highway Code", "The Driving Manual", "Your Driving Test" and a leaflet currently being issued with vehicle excise duty reminders.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions the Transport Research Laboratory has come to for the criteria which need to be applied to the installation of pedestrian crossings and islands to meet the needs of vulnerable people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Transport Research Laboratory has carried out research into pedestrians' use of crossings, the effectiveness of the crossings and accidents which occur.

As a result, the assessment criteria for the provision of pedestrian crossing facilities are being revised to remove the existing numerical criteria and encourage more account to be taken of local needs.

The new Puffin pedestrian crossing which is being developed makes it easier and safer for all pedestrians. it automatically extends the crossing time as needed for elderly and disabled pedestrians. The TRL is continuing to monitor and assess the new crossing design.

Advice has been issued to local authorities on the provision of dropped kerbs and tactile paving at pedestrian crossing points to improve the safe and independent mobility of wheelchair users and visually impaired people.

Severn Crossing

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received since May 1992 concerning developing (a) the current Severn bridge and (b) the second Severn crossing as toll-free bridges.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have received since May 1992 some 150 representations about the reduction or removal of the tolls specified in the Severn Bridges Act 1992. Very few of them distinguish between the two bridges.

Electric Cars

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken by his Department on the possible use and development of electric cars in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Transport Research Laboratory is soon to complete a review of worldwide research and experience in the use and environmental impact of alternative fuels including electricity. This covers various road vehicles including cars. It will draw on earlier TRL work on electric vehicles which included published reports on their market prospects, energy consumption and refuelling infrastructure.

The Department is also funding a study examining the feasibility of limited in-service field trials of vehicles using a range of alternative fuels including electricity.

In addition, engineers in the Department continue to keep abreast of electric vehicle developments worldwide, and I welcome the continuing efforts by manufacturers to develop advanced batteries and more competitive electric vehicles.

British Rail (Public Service Obligation)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the relationship between the public service obligation grant for 1993-94 and the 1988 public service obligation directive to British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Public service obligation grant is paid to meet the cost to British Rail of compliance with the obligation laid down, which is currently defined in the Secretary of State's direction of 30 March 1988. Payments made in the years since the direction was issued have varied according to need. The Government's initial estimate of grant needed for 1993-94 is £850 million, but the amount to be paid will be settled in the light of the board's budget, still in preparation, and may be subject to subsequent adjustment.

Coaches

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the difference between the minimum standards of construction for coaches registered in the United Kingdom for coaches which do not exceed 60 mph and those for coaches which travel at speeds up to 70 mph; and if he will exempt coaches which do not exceed 60 mph from the requirement to have seat belts fitted even in exposed seats.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Coaches and large buses that can exceed 60 mph are required to have anti-lock brakes and seat belts on exposed seats and, from 1 April 1993, to comply with European superstructure strength requirements.

These features are not required for large buses that cannot exceed 60 mph. They operate normally at low speed on short town and city routes. The need for belts and the likelihood of their being used are less than on faster long-distance coaches and we have no plans to make them compulsory.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to tighten up regulations on the construction of coaches registered in the United Kingdom which travel at speeds not exceeding 60 mph.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No, but I intend to monitor the situation. If it becomes apparent that coach operators are generally using vehicles of lower than appropriate safety standards, I will consider new measures.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport from what year coaches will be restricted to a maximum speed of 100 kilometres per hour (a) on the continent and (b) in the United Kingdom; what effect these restrictions will have on the safety standards of coaches manufactured in the United Kingdom; and what representations he has received from coach manufacturers on this subject.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: EC directive 92/6 requires speed limiters on new coaches to be set at 100 km/h from 1 January 1994. It will also apply to coaches registered after 1 January 1988 from 1 January 1995 if the coach is used for international transport and from 1 January 1996 if the coach is used for national transport. We will be consulting shortly on draft regulations to implement the directive.

The safety standards applying to the construction of coaches are not directly affected by the directive.

I have been approached on the subject of safety by one United Kingdom coach manufacturer.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the costs so far to (a) British Rail and (b) his Department of preparing for the privatisation of railways;

(2) what are (a) the staff costs and (b) the consultancy fees he expects (i) British Rail and (ii) his Department to incur in 1992-93 and 1993-94 in preparing for privatisation;

(3) what sums (a) British Rail and (b) his Department have budgeted for 1993-94 to meet the cost of preparing for rail privatisation.

Mr. Freeman The Department of Transport's internal BR privatisation costs cannot be separately identified before September 1991. The following costs include those of special advisers where appropriate:

	£ million
1991-92	0·5
1992-93 estimated outturn	1·5
1993-94 expected expenditure	9·5
Consultants' costs:
1991-92	0·5
1992-93 estimated outturn	5·2
1993-94 expected expenditure	12·0

British Rail's costs and estimates are a matter for British Rail.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Listed Buildings

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to transfer the responsibility for grade I listed buildings from English Heritage to local authorities.

Mr. Brooke: English Heritage's forward strategy, published last October, proposed certain changes to responsibilities for grade II listed building and conservation area casework in London. Revised proposals have recently been put to me following public consultation, and I am considering them. The strategy proposed no change in current responsibilities for grade II buildings outside London.

Football Licensing Authority

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the Football Licensing Authority will begin to issue licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Licensing will be introduced in time for the start of the 1993-94 football season in August. Accordingly, section 9 of the Football Spectators Act, which creates the offence of admitting spectators to unlicensed premises, will be brought into force during the close season.

I also intend to use the powers conferred on me by section 11 of the 1989 Act to make an order ensuring that clubs in the Premier League and first division meet the August 1994 deadline for all-seater stadiums. I will therefore begin shortly the statutory consultations which will lead to the inclusion of seating requirements in next year's licences.

Initially, I intend to levy only a nominal fee of £100. The level of the fee will be kept under review, and is likely later to be raised to reflect more closely the full costs involved in determining the licence conditions.

The Government continue to support the principles of spectator safety and comfort as set out in the Taylor report. We remain firmly committed to the all seater requirement for the top two divisions, and to the implementation of safe terracing for those in the lower divisions that choose not to provide all-seating. The introduction of licensing will be a major step in achieving these aims.

HEALTH

Nursing Care Beds

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing care beds for elderly people were available in hospitals in each regional health authority in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 19 February 1993]: The average number of available beds in wards caring for elderly patients is given in the table. There is no separate classification of "nursing care beds".

NATIONAL FINANCE

Alcohol Imports

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would the average tax saving be in (a) excise duty and (b) VAT to an individual buying the full indicative allowance of beer in France and importing into the United Kingdom for personal consumption, compared with purchasing the same amount in the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: The guidance level for duty paid beer is 110 litres. On beer of typical strength, the excise duty in the United Kingdom is 41p per litre or £45·10 for 110 litres compared with £2·57 for 110 litres in France. French duty is due to rise from 2p to 7·5p a litre or £8·25 for 110 litres in May. The United Kingdom applies a VAT rate of 17·5 per cent. on beer compared with 18·6 per cent. in France. The amount of VAT that is liable on 110 litres of beer in either country will vary according to the product.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many arrests have been made by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise verification officers since 1 January of persons illegally selling alcohol bought in France or Belgium at lower excise duty rates and imported to the United Kingdom ostensibly for personal use.

Sir John Cope: In January, Customs detected 36 cases of illegal sales of excise goods. Of these, 13 related to alcohol. Customs take legal proceedings by way of arrest when appropriate, but other options, such as proceeding by way of information and summons, are also available. Two arrests were made. Other forms of offence action have been taken or are being considered in the remaining cases.

Manufacturing Investment

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the level of manufacturing investment in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Estimates of manufacturing investment for 1990, 1991 and 1992 at constant prices were published in the 1992 fourth quarter capital expenditure press notice released by the Central Statistical Office on 11 February 1993. The 1992 figure is provisional. Copies of the press notice are available in the House of Commons Library.

Monetary Policy

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which monetary aggregate takes precedence in the formation of policy in the event of M0 rising above and M4 falling below their respective target ranges.

Mr. Nelson: Current spending in the economy has in the past been more closely related to M0 than to M4. The authorities also take account of a number of other domestic indicators, as well as the exchange rate, in their monetary policy decisions.

Bank Notes

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of redesigning and issuing the new £5, £10 and £20 Bank of England notes; and what will be the cost of redesigning and reissuing revised notes which are easier to distinguish from each other.

Mr. Nelson: The cost of designing the new £5, £10 and £20 Bank of England notes, including subsequent changes in design, falls within the normal research and development expenditure of the Bank of England printing works which amounts to some £750,000 a year.

In introducing the new series of banknotes, the opportunity was taken to incorporate features in the design and in the printing processes which reduced the cost of producing notes. The cost of printing and issuing banknotes amounts to some £60 million a year. The revised versions of the new notes will be issued in the normal course of replacing worn notes, so there will be no additional issuing costs.

Imports

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect of the change in the value of the pound sterling since 14 September 1992 on the cost of imports in the last quarter of 1992.

Mr. Nelson: In addition to the external value of the pound, import prices depend on world prices and importers' profit margins. Thus, it is not possible precisely to isolate the impact of the change in the exchange rate.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 397, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Nelson: The estimated spending on publicity during 1992-93 is £32,000. This is lower than the figure given on 2 June and the difference mainly results from the transfer of Chessington computer centre from the Treasury to the Office of Public Service and Science. Budgeted expenditure for 1993-94 is £50,000.

Retail Sales

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the level of retail sales in (a) November 1992 and (b) January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The estimate of the volume of retail sales —seasonally adjusted—in November 1992 is 121·6; 1985 = 100. The provisional estimate for January 1993 is 122·3. The level of sales volumes in the three months to January equalled the record level recorded in the three months to November.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on environmental protection of a windfall tax on the utility companies.

Mr. Dorrell: None, but in the absence of other changes, an increase in the tax burden on utilities would reduce the resources available to them.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the scope and value of tax incentives for companies for environmental protection projects for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no specific incentives for companies' environmental projects, but the taxation system as a whole contains many incentives to protect the environment. These include the level of hydrocarbon oils duties and capital allowances which already cover energy saving investment.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times a windfall tax has been levied since 1961; which types of companies were affected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The term "windfall tax" is not clearly defined. Development gains tax—1973—development land tax—1976—the tax on banks' interest-free deposits —1981—and supplementary petroleum duty—1981— were introduced in response to what were seen as exceptionally high profits. The first two applied to gains on disposals of development land by firms in any sector, the third to the banking sector and the last to the oil industry.

Environmental Variables

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what efforts have been made to date to integrate environmental variables into national accounting systems.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 8 December 1992, at columns 571-72.

Cycle Helmets

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about zero rating cycle helmets for VAT purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject and these will be carefully considered in the run-up to the Budget. The hon. Member will appreciate that it would be inappropriate for me to comment further at this stage.

EC Abatement Procedure

Mr. Booth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the abatement procedure has reduced the United Kingdom net payments to the European Community since 1985.

Sir John Cope: By the end of 1992, the abatement had reduced the United Kingdom's net payments to the European Community budget by £11,843 million. The table shows the level of abatement received each year since 1985.

£ million

Year	Abatement
1985	166
1986	1,701
1987	1,153
1988	1,594
1989	1,154
1990	1,697
1991	2,497
1992	1,881

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual yield from capital gains tax in each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Dorrell: The requested information is given in table 1.2 of the 1992 edition of "Inland Revenue Statistics". A revised estimate for the yield in 1992-93 will be published on Budget day in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1993-94".

RPI Advisory Committee

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive a report from the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee.

Mr. Lamont [pursuant to the reply, 21 January 1993, c. 344]: I have today received a supplementary report from the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee on the treatment in the index of council tax transitional relief. The supplementary report is being published this afternoon as Cm 2153 and copies are available in the Vote Office.

Personal Income Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the net revenue forgone in each financial year as a result of the reductions in personal income tax for higher rate taxpayers introduced by the Finance Act 1988 in the light of Government receipts since then.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The table shows the direct revenue costs in a full year compared with reintroduced tax rates of 45, 50, 55 and 60 per cent. The band widths for the tax rate schedule have been calculated by uprating the corresponding parts of the 1987-88 regime by movements in the retail prices index as in the statutory indexation formula. The estimates take account of the introduction of independent taxation from 1990-91 and the restriction of mortgage interest relief to the basic rate from 1991-92.

Estimated change in tax revenue at rates in excess of 40 per cent.

Year	£ billion
1988-89	2·6

[1] Provisional estimates.

The estimates do not allow for any behavioural effect that might have resulted had the tax rates above 40 per cent. been retained, and do not include capital gains tax.

Maastricht Treaty

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the table given in his answer of 21 January, Official Report, columns 339-40, relating to the convergence criteria of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 23 February 1993]: Following is the updated table as requested.

Public Expenditure Programme

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings he or his departmental officials have had with representatives of the International Monetary Fund in the United Kingdom at which he or they have discussed with them the Government's public expenditure programmes.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 23 February 1993]: Under article IV of the articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund, fund staff carry out regular surveillance of the economies of the member countries. Fund staff visited the United Kingdom on 1 to 11 December 1992 for its annual article IV consultation. This consultation covered all aspects of the Government's economic policy, including public expenditure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Flood Prevention, Stanmore

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will hold urgent discussions with the National Rivers Authority and the London borough of Harrow on the need for flood prevention remedial measures to protect residents in certain areas of Stanmore, Middlesex.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food makes grant available to the National Rivers Authority, local authorities and other bodies towards the cost of flood defence schemes which are technically sound, economically worth while and environmentally sympathetic. In the case referred to, the Ministry has indicated that any scheme put forward by the responsible local bodies will be sympathetically considered against the criteria laid down. I understand that the National Rivers Authority is working on designing a suitable scheme and is in contact with the Ministry's river and coastal engineers.

Marine Laboratories

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what consultations he has had with (a) staff, (b) the fishing industry, (c) local councils, and (d) hon. or right hon. Members regarding the possibility of conferring next steps agency status on the marine laboratory in Lowestoft; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he has given to conferring next steps agency status on the marine laboratory in Lowestoft; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has for the rationalisation or amalgamation of services provided by the marine laboratory facilities in Aberdeen and Lowestoft; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what assessment has been made of the implications for organisational and departmental responsibilities of the assumption of next steps agency status by one or both of the present marine laboratory facilities in Aberdeen and Lowestoft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Staff representatives were informed last July that a study group had been established to review the merits of a move to next steps agency status for the MAFF directorate of fisheries research. My right hon. Friend is currently considering the issues raised by this review in consultation with colleagues and will report his decision to the House in the normal way.

Salmonella

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further advice he has on salmonella in eggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 9 February 1993, c. 556-58]: I have today made an order revoking the Poultry Laying Flocks (Testing and Registration etc) Order 1989, as amended. Commercial egg laying flocks will no longer be required to be registered or tested for the presence of salmonella.

I previously announced that, in the light of the expert advice from the committee chaired by Professor Heather Dick, and in accordance with the new EC zoonoses directive, the compulsory slaughter of commercial egg-laying flocks infected with salmonella enteritidis would no longer be required: this change will take effect tomorrow.

Pea Crop

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the precise criteria for the derogation for this season's vining pea crop from the set-aside regime.

Mr. Curry: Vining peas are not covered by the arable area payments scheme, which includes provision for set aside. However, there is a derogation for those who can demonstrate that they had sown, or were committed to sowing, vining peas before 17 November 1992 and who wish to claim aid on their vining peas for 1993. Any such growers will have to apply to their regional service centre or local area office for a vining pea claim form and to return it by 15 May 1993. They will have to confirm that they have sown by that date and to sign the following undertaking and provide the supporting information mentioned.

DECLARATION ON VINING PEAS

1. I understand that vining peas have been removed from the list of crops eligible for arable area aid. I am, however, claiming aid in 1993 for vining peas under the derogation in Commission Regulation 3738/92 which permits me to do so. I certify that prior to 17 November 1992, I was already committed to growing vining peas in the expectation of receiving area payments, because either:

2. I had prior to that date already entered into a binding contract with a buyer or processor for vining peas which is still in force, and had therefore committed myself to setting aside land in the expectation of planting vining peas on other land and receiving aid in respect of them and could not have changed my plans on or after 17 November 1992 without suffering adverse financial consequences: I attach a copy of the contract; or

3. Although I had not entered into a contract as referred to in (2) above, I can demonstrate that before 17 November 1992 I had made a farm plan committing myself to setting aside particular land in the expectation of planting vining peas on other land and receiving aid in respect of them and could not have changed my plans on or after 17 November 1992 without suffering adverse financial consequences. I attach a copy of the dated farm plan covering all arable crops and intended set aside land and an explanation of my claim that, had I changed my plans on or after 17 November 1992, I would have necessarily suffered adverse financial consequences.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid Debt

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each write-off of aid debt approved since 1 January 1987, with the date and sum involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following aid debt agreements have been signed since 1 January 1987:

Country	Debt agreement	Signed	Value (£)
Senegal	"United Kingdom/Senegal retrospective terms agreement 1988"	29 August 1988	1,070,878·57
Guyana	"United Kingdom/Guyana debt rescheduling arrangement 1989"	29 August 1990	5,457,440·55
Egypt	"United Kingdom/Egypt retrospective terms agreement 1991"	25 July 1991	7,020,961·00
Jamaica	"United Kingdom/Jamaica debt waiver arrangement 1991"	30 April 1992	9,541,265·73
Bolivia	"United Kingdom/Bolivia retrospective terms agreement 1992"	9 June 1992	1,053,256·48
Honduras	"United Kingdom/Honduras retrospective terms agreement 1992"	21 August 1992	5,000,000·00
Total			29,143,802·33

In addition we have agreed to write off £56 million of Zambia's aid debt with effect from 1 April 1993, provided that Zambia's economic reform programme stays on track. Aid agreements with a number of other countries were signed prior to 1 January 1987.

The forgiveness of aid debt has in recent years been only a small part of our wider initiatives through Toronto and Trinidad terms to relieve debt and debt servicing payment by developing countries.

Thailand

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid per year the British Government give to Thailand, how much aid is given (a) to the Government and (b) to non-governmental organisations; and what the aid is used for.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the last three years for which figures are available, gross United Kingdom bilateral aid expenditure to Thailand was as follows:

(£'000)

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
(a) Official channels	11,318	9,071	3,644
(b) Non-governmental Organisations (NGOs)	362	458	423
	11,680	9,529	4,067

Multilateral aid to Thailand attributed to the United Kingdom is estimated to have been £3,320,000 in 1989, the latest available figure.

The totals at (a) comprise assistance under the aid and trade provision, principally the supply of locomotives, funds from the Commonwealth Development Corporation—present coverage includes development finance, housing, industry and natural resources—disaster relief, drug-related aid, and technical co-operation projects focused on United Kingdom training, English language teaching, flax processing, water, sanitation and public administration.

The aid through NGOs (b) covers a host of sectors including social and women's development, environmental conservation, income generation, education, health and agriculture, and includes work with prostitutes and street children through Christian Aid.

Angola

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are being made to supply emergency aid to Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We maintain close contact with British non-governmental organisations which are assessing how best to help meet current needs. Security problems are making assessment difficult.

Following the destruction of Luanda's water treatment works, we have contributed £45,000 to One World Action, a non-governmental organisation, which is running a community-based cholera prevention programme.

Poland and Hungary (Assistance for Economic Restructuring)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of the current application of the PHARE funds by (a) cost, (b) purpose of each project, (c) country where funds are to be used and (d) the British firms or institutions involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The list of current PHARE-funded projects is extensive. EC Commission documents containing information on their cost, purpose and recipient country have been placed in the Libraries of the House. Details of the involvement of British firms and institutions are not available in the form requested.

Kenya (Elections)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many ballot papers were supplied by the British Government for the recent Kenyan elections; and how many were necessary for meeting the legitimate voting needs of the Kenyan electorate;

(2) for what reasons the ballot papers for the recent Kenyan elections were supplied by the British Government rather than by the European Community.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British Government did not supply any ballot papers for the recent Kenyan elections.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many ballot boxes were supplied by the British Government for the recent elections in Kenya; how many were calculated as necessary for the elections; and how many were thought to be surplus to immediate requirements.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British Government supplied 35,000 ballot boxes in accordance with the requirement for the elections calculated by the Kenyan electoral commission.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of the current application of TACIS—technical assistance for the Commonwealth of Independent States—funds by (a) cost, (b) purpose of each project, (c) destination for funds and (d) the British firms or institutions involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The list of current TACIS-funded projects is extensive. EC Commission documents containing information on their cost, purpose and recipient country are now available in the Libraries of the House. Details of the involvement of British firms and institutions are not available in the form requested.

Development Banks

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the capital of (a) the World bank, (b) the Latin American development bank, (c) the African development bank and (d) the Asian development bank is held by the United Kingdom; and what sum has been paid in.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom's present shareholdings are detailed in the table.

Bank	Total United Kingdom shares	Percentage of total subscribed capital	Value (US$ million)	Cumulative amount paid in (US$ million)	Cumulative percentage shareholding paid in
World bank	69,397	5·50	8,372	539·5	6·44
Inter-American	32,839	0·97	580·4	25·2	4·34
Asian	36,131	2·24	516·8	62·0	11·99
African[1]	22,564	1·39	225·6 SDRsmn	28·2 SDRsmn	12·58

Notes:

[1] African Development Bank shareholdings are expressed in Bank Units of Account (BUA) which are equivalent to Special Drawing Rights (SDRs).

NB: These figures do not include the funds the United Kingdom has contributed to the concessional lending funds of the banks.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the level of arrears owed to (a) the World bank, (b) the Latin American development bank, (c) the African development bank and (d) the Asian development bank in each of the past three years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is detailed in the table:

Institution	Arrears at end 1990 US $ million	Arrears at end 1991 US $ million	Arrears at end 1992 US $ million
World Bank	2,420	1,937	1,974
Inter-American Development Bank	704	190	13
Asian Development Bank	31	33	31
African Development Bank	[1]143	[1]177	[1]282

[1] African Development Bank Group arrears are expressed in Special Drawing Rights (SDRs).

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the funds disbursed under the auspices of the World bank's special programme for Africa originate from (a) the European Community and (b) the United Kingdom bilateral aid program.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: According to information from the World bank, 7·3 per cent. of the funds disbursed under the auspices of the World bank's special programme for Africa up to June 1992 came from the European Community and 6·4 per cent. from the United Kingdom bilateral aid programme.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington), of 11 December 1992, Official Report, column 816, on access to information about the World bank, which body has made a proposal to make World bank environmental assessments more widely available; which body considered that proposal; what were the details of that proposal; when and what was the outcome; and what further initiatives he will take to pursue this proposal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Dafis) on 11 February at column 727. The bank's executive directors are expected to consider this recommendation soon.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to ensure that World bank staff implement fully and efficiently the decisions taken by the World bank board.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World bank board regularly reviews the bank's performance in implementing policies and in implementing programmes in its borrowing member countries. In addition individual World bank operations are subject after completion to evaluation of their effectiveness in meeting approved objectives; evaluation findings are submitted to the board.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of each local Zambian non-governmental organisation which will be consulted on each of the World bank projects under consideration in Zambia; on what date consultation was initiated; and on what date it is due to be concluded.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We do not have the information requested.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the World bank to conclude the review of the implementation of the Narmada dam project.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As agreed at the bank's board meeting last October, a World bank mission is due to review in April the progress made against a set of performance benchmarks agreed with the Indian authorities.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects will be on the agenda of the next general meeting of the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The next annual meeting of the World bank will be held in October. The agenda is not yet available.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what methods and using what criteria the United Kingdom contribution to the World bank in 1991-92 is assessed for effectiveness.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our contributions to the World bank form part of the British aid programme and are judged against the objectives set out in the annual departmental report, Cm. 2202. The greater part of our contributions are made to the International Development Association on the basis of the reports agreed by donors for each replenishment.

Wappenhans Report

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of discussion concerning the Wappenhans report.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Dafis) on 11 February, at column 727.

Sardar Sarovar Project

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account has been taken of human rights violations associated with the Sardar Sarovar project in considering United Kingdom involvement in funding the project.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are well aware of reports of such incidents. Our position on the continuation of external support for the project is that we shall take into account all the relevant issues.

International Development Association

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the conditions attached to the ninth replenishment of IDA; and what steps have been taken to ensure they were met prior to the 10th replenishment of IDA.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The report on the ninth replenishment of the International Development Association was published as Cm. 1325 in November 1990. Annual progress reports on implementation are presented to the World bank's board of directors, and were considered by IDA donors in the course of negotiations on the 10th replenishment.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the United Kingdom's contribution in current prices, and as a proportion of the total, to the International Development Association on its establishment and on each successive replenishment, including the proposed 10th replenishment; and what reasons there have been for changes in the proportion.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: United Kingdom contributions to IDA replenishments have been:

	US dollars millions	Share
IDA 1
Initial Subscription	131·14	17·33
Supplementary Contribution	96·60	12·97
IDA 2	155·52	12·96

IDA 7	401·52	6·70
IDA 8	524·16	6·70
IDA 9	619·03	6·70
IDA 10[1]	620·00	6·15

[1] Proposed contribution

n/a = Not available.

The United Kingdom share is affected by the number of donors and the outcome of discussions among donors on burden sharing during the replenishment negotiations.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministers' Homes (Security)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of work carried out at public expense at the home of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food since 1989.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Security work is carried out at the home of Ministers on the advice of the security authorities. Its cost is kept to the minimum necessary to provide proper protection.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those Ministers entitled to assistance from public funds in respect of security facilities at their private homes.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister in how many cases since 1979 permanent accommodation for security staff has been provided at public cost for Ministers in or on property owned by Ministers.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

It is not in the public interest to disclose or aid the identification of security arrangements relating to public figures.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to reduce the levels of those juvenile offences linked to substance abuse or drug or gambling addiction.

Mr. Jack: It is not possible to estimate precisely how much juvenile crime is linked with substance abuse or drug addiction, although it is known that many offenders, including juvenile offenders, may have problems with alcohol or drugs, and all action to reduce misuse may, accordingly, help to prevent crime.

The Department of Health organises extensive publicity campaigns against the misuse of drugs and other substances. The national curriculum incorporates aspects of health education, including the dangers of drugs, solvents and alcohol misuse. which schools are statutorily required to teach. The Home Office drugs prevention initiative, which was launched in 1989, has established 20 local drug prevention teams around Great Britain. The main purpose of the teams is to work with the community to promote the prevention of drug misuse and young people are targeted as the principal group at risk.

Home Office research has shown that there is no evidence of any association between the playing of amusement machines, which is the only form of gambling to which juveniles have ready access, and delinquency.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on evidence from the Magistrates Association on the extent to which teenage offenders commit frequent crimes over a relatively short period as a result of a sudden traumatic incident in their lives; and if he will outline his proposals for dealing with such cases.

Mr. Jack: We have noted the contents of the evidence to which the hon. Member refers. This is currently before the Home Affairs Select Committee for consideration in its inquiry. Courts and criminal justice agencies are already able to take account of the circumstances which give rise to offending behaviour in determining the most appropriate course of action in particular cases: relevant advice on this should be included in a pre-sentence report, which is required before imposing any custodial sentence in the magistrates or youth courts, or one of the more demanding community sentences.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of cleared-up offences were committed by juveniles in 1979, 1981, 1985, 1991 and 1992;

(2) what is the amount of crime for which juveniles are known to have been responsible in 1979, 1985 and 1992;

(3) how many offences committed by juveniles were dealt with by way of caution in 1979 and 1992.

Mr. Jack: Although overall clear-up figures are collected centrally, it is not possible to separately identify those offences committed by juveniles.

Information on "known offenders"—those found guilty or cautioned—by age is published annually in chapter 5 of the Command Paper "Criminal statistics England and Wales". 1992 data will not be published until the autumn. Copies of the annual publication are available in the Library.

Bail Offenders

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offences were committed by persons on bail in (a) 1978 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) on 22 February 1993, at column 427.

Prison Assaults

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of convictions of assault on (a) male prison officers and (b) female prison officers at Durham prison, Frankland prison and Low Newton centre for the past 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about prisoners found guilty on adjudication of an assault on an officer or member of staff is available only from 1 April 1989 and is given in the table. The sex of the officer or member of staff is not recorded centrally.

Crime (Clear-up Statistics)

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the clear-up rates for crime in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Jack: The requested information for 1979 is published in table 2.21 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1989". Information for 1992 is not yet available but information for 1991, which is the latest published figure, has just been published in table 2.11 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1991". Copies of both are available in the Library.

Police (Stabbings)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in each police authority area have been injured or killed by stabbing in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: Information on the number of police officers injured by stabbing is not collected centrally.

The number of police officers who were the victims of offences currently recorded as homicide where a sharp instrument was used, including knives, by police force in England and Wales since 1979 is a follows:

Police Force	Year	Number
Wiltshire	1979	1
Metropolitan	1980	1
West Yorkshire	1981	1

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many stabbings resulted in either maiming or death in each police authority area in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: Statistics on the proportion of offences where a sharp instrument or knife were involved were published for those forces where they were available for the years 1986 to 1989 in tables 2.23 and 2.24 of "Criminal Statistics, 1989, England and Wales", Cm. 1322, a copy of which is in the Library. The number of offences currently recorded as homicide where a sharp instrument, including a knife, was involved is shown by police force in the table. Information for the years 1979 to 1981 is not available except at disproportionate cost and information for 1992 is not yet available.

Police Forces

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police forces in England and Wales which include more than one county administration; and if he will set out the numbers on the combined police authority, in each case, from each constituent local authority and petty sessions.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following police forces in England and Wales include more than one county administration:

Avon and Somerset, Devon and Cornwall, Hampshire, Sussex, Thames Valley, West Mercia, Dyfed Powys, North Wales and South Wales.

The numbers on the combined police authorities are as follows:

County	Local Authority Members	Magistrates
Avon and Somerset

Prisoner Statistics

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisoners in custody in each of the last six months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 12 February, at columns 811-12.

Immigration

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial contribution is made by Her Majesty's Government to the work of the ad hoc group, immigration, including the cost of time of civil servants spent at meetings, allocations for travel costs and any other specific allocations; and on which vote the costs fall.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Except during the United Kingdom presidency, there have been no direct financial subventions from United Kingdom funds to the work of the ad hoc working group on immigration.

Meetings of the ad hoc group, usually in the presidency capital, and of its subgroups, usually in Brussels, are serviced by the secretariat of the Council of the European Communities, and accommodation and so on are provided by the presidency or the secretariat respectively.

Attendance at the preparation for meetings forms part of the normal duties of officials, most of whom are from the immigration and nationality department, their salary and so on and travelling subsistence costs form part of the overall expenditure of the Department, which is met from class IX vote 3.

A detailed breakdown of the staff costs of all those involved in this work could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward amendments to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to permit members of the Animal Procedures Committee to disclose information currently restricted.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government have no plans to amend section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Betting Shops

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if she will make it her policy to extend the provisions of the Shops Act 1950 to cover betting shops, before 1 March.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No, we have no plans to extend the provisions of the Shops Act 1950 to cover licensed betting offices.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for tackling juvenile crime in Cleveland.

Mr. Jack: The Government have already introduced a wide range of measures which aim to prevent young people from committing crime. In Cleveland, safer cities projects in Hartlepool and Middlesbrough provide grants for a number of local initiatives aimed at tackling juvenile crime. These link, in turn, with the work being undertaken at local level by the police, probation, local authority education and social services, which is co-ordinated through an inter-agency strategy group.

In the Criminal Justice Act 1991, implemented on 1 October 1992, Parliament strengthened the powers of the court in relation to defendants under the age of 18. The Government are presently considering additional measures to help the courts to deal more effectively with the small number of juveniles who persistently re-offend and for whom existing measures appear not to be working.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to give local authorities the power forcefully to detain juveniles remanded or serving a sentence in their care.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

Following consultation, we are considering what further guidance may need to be given about the control and restraint of young people in residential care.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies House

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what checks his Department makes when a company files its annual return at Companies House.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This is a matter for Companies House. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 22 February 1993:

You tabled a Parliamentary Question regarding the checks made when a company delivers its annual return to Companies House.

My examiners carry out two types of check. First, they ensure that the company's name, registered number and registered office are consistent with the information already held.

Secondly, they check that all the necessary details have been provided regarding company type, principal business activities, location of registers, secretary, directors, issued capital and members and that the form has been signed and dated.

This process is simplified if the company uses a "shuttle" annual return form provided by Companies House. In this case, most of the information will be pre-printed and it would only be necessary to check additions or amendments to that information.

Department Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the amounts paid to each of his Department's inspectors for the reports published since 1985.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

Audit Companies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce proposals under which all auditing firms carrying out the audit of a public limited company would be required to publish the profits made from its overall auditing business.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Car Registrations

Ms. Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about the number of new car registrations in each year after 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: New car registrations between 1988 and 1992 are as follows:

Year
1988	2,215,574
1989	2,300,944
1990	2,008,934
1991	1,592,326
1992	1,593,601

Highlands and Islands

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has made to the European Commission with regard to objective I status for the highlands and islands of Scotland; what decision he has reached about whether Merseyside should be put forward; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) on 17 February, Official Report, column 269.

Cleaner Technology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the agencies represented on his liaison group on cleaner technology; how many meetings this group has had; and what new initiatives have flowed from its work.

Mr. Eggar: The interdepartmental liaison group on cleaner technology has representatives from Department of the Environment, Science and Engineering Research Council, Health and Safety Executive, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Office of Science and Techology, and the Royal Academy of Engineering, under the chairmanship of Department of Trade and Industry. The group has now had three meetings. The group has been exchanging information on the separate initiatives that the different Departments are pursuing and the scope for co-operation between them. The Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment are working together to promote waste minimisation and energy efficiency.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his inquiry into United Kingdom output of, and trade in, environmental and clean technology industry has been completed; and if he will place its conclusions in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: Work within the DTI to identify and extract relevant data on output of, and trade in, environmental and clean technology is continuing.

European Companies (Accounts Regulation)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether subsidiaries of European companies are subject to home or host country accountancy regulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Companies incorporated in Great Britain, whether or not they are subsidiaries of companies incorporated in other European countries, are required to prepare and file accounts in accordance with part VII of the Companies Act 1985.

Military Equipment

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether military equipment made as a result of collaboration between a British and an overseas company needs a United Kingdom export licence before it can be sold to a third country.

Mr. Needham: Military equipment made as a result of collaboration between a British company and an overseas company requires a United Kingdom export licence if exported from the United Kingdom. Exports of such equipment from overseas countries are the responsibility of those countries.

Weaving Industry

Mr. Martlew: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investment has taken place in the cotton and man-made fibre weaving industry, statistical class 4322, in the last five years for which figures are available; and to what extent this investment benefited from Government grants.

Mr. Sainsbury: The available information for investment for standard industrial classification activity heading 4322 is given in the table.

Investment in the cotton, silk and man-made fibres weaving industry

	£ million
1986	29·3
1987	21·7
1988	36·4
1989	36·3
1990	40·9

The annual amounts of Government grants paid in support of investment in the cotton and man-made fibre weaving industry in the United Kingdom for the years 1986 to 1990 were:

	£ thousands
1986	920
1987	1,480
1988	469
1989	685
1990	953

In Great Britain grants were paid under the regional selective assistance scheme and the revised regional developments grants scheme. Information about grants paid to this industry under the original regional grants scheme is available only at disproportionate cost. In Northern Ireland grants were made available from the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland under the Industrial Development (NI) Order 1982.

Single Market

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints were referred to the single market compliance unit in 1992; and how many were satisfactorily resolved.

Mr. Needham: The single market compliance unit—SMCU—receives inquiries daily. At any one time the SMCU is dealing with some 30 to 40 cases. However, in practice, after detailed examination, only a minority of these, about 10 per cent. turn out to be breaches of EC law. Those not involving breaches are normally passed on to the Department's sectoral or trade divisions which are better able to assist with such inquiries.

In 1992 the SMCU dealt with 23 new cases involving actual breaches of the EC law to add to the 16 which it was already dealing with. Typically, a case takes at least six months and sometimes over three years to resolve. This is due to the lengthy process of compiling sufficient evidence, normally with the help of British embassies, together with the time it takes to raise a complaint with a member state or the European Commission. Of the cases dealt with last year by the SMCU, nine so far have been successfully resolved.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to expand the number of desks at the single market compliance unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: In line with my Department's new "Business in Europe" initiative, the single market compliance unit is to expand. Expressed in terms of man years, the level of resources allocated to the SMCU is to rise from 2·5 to 4·5.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Internal Market Council held on 8 February.

Mr. Needham: I attended this first Council of the Danish presidency under the chairmanship of the new Danish Industry Minister, Mr. Troejborg. It was also the first Council for Commissioner Vanni d'Archirafi.

The meeting had a short agenda which it completed in half a day. A review of the completion of the internal market confirmed that some 95 per cent. of the original White Paper had been agreed, with few problems reported on the free movement of goods since the 1 January deadline. An updated "league table" of implementation of White Paper measures by member states showed that the United Kingdom had risen to third position, with an 85 per cent. implementation record.

There was general agreement on carrying forward the initiative on "Making the Single Market Work", in the light of the Commission's response to the Sutherland report. It is hoped that specific proposals on, for example, improving exchange of information between member states on single market issues will be considered by future Councils during the Danish presidency.

The Council adopted a regulation providing for checks for product safety at the Community's external border, as well as food law directives covering fruit juices and food contaminants. The Commission was requested by the Council to introduce specific proposals for safety standards covering motor cycle helmets, in addition to the existing powers available under the personal protective equipment directive.

One-stop Shops

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress on his pilot scheme for one-stop shops.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Fifty-seven partnerships have submitted bids for funding pilot one-stop shops. The bids cover a wide geographical area and many make proposals for establishing One Stop Shops in more than one local area. This is an excellent reponse and these bids are now being examined.

I will announce the winning bids within the next two months.

EC Development Assistance

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has made to the European Commission with regard to objective 1 status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 February 1993]: I refer to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) on 17 February, Official Report, column 269.

Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices and sub-post offices closed in the United Kingdom and in each region and county each year since 1988.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The number of post offices closed in the United Kingdom in each year since 1988 is as follows:

Year	Number
1988-89	76
1989-90	242
1990-91	372
1991-92	303

The majority of these closures were in rural areas where, due to the decline in the number of village shops, it has not been possible to find suitable candidates for subpostmasterships. A breakdown of this information by region or by county could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the value of the privately owned assets that form the branch service network of Post Office Counters Ltd.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Neither the Government nor the Post Office have any records of the privately owned assets within the branch network of Post Office Counters Ltd. and have no authoritative basis on which to estimate the value of those assets.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the Government Departments and other agencies having contracts with Post Office Counters Ltd.; and what is the duration of the contract period in each case.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The following Government Department and agencies have contracts with Post Office Counters Ltd.:

Department/Agency	Duration of current contract (years)
Department for National Savings	3
Benefits Agency	3
United Kingdom Passport Agency	2
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency	3

In addition Post Office Counters has contracts with the BBC, Girobank, Royal Mail, Parcelforce, British Telecom, British Gas, regional and Scottish electricity companies and some 100 local authorities. The duration of the current contracts with these bodies varies between six months and five years.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of franchises for franchised post offices and the income generated from the sale of franchises.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The cost of each franchise for franchised post offices varies with the circumstances of sale. Cumulative income from the sale of franchises to December 1992 amounted to some £5·5 million.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the profit or loss on Post Office Counters Ltd. in each year since the separation of its accounts; and what was the value of the direct assets of Post Office Counters in each of these years.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The profits after taxation and net assets of Post Office Counters Ltd. in each year since the separation of its accounts were as follows:

Year	Profits after taxation £ million	Net Assets £ million
1986-87	13·6	455·4
1987-88	20·9	493·7
1988-89	31·3	517·9
1989-90	10·7	[1]251·7
1990-91	22·0	244·0
1991-92	16·0	254·0

[1] As part of the introduction of return on capital employed targets, a special dividend, representing funds accumulated as a result of previous years' activities and amounting to £276·3 million, was paid to the holding company.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices and sub-post offices, showing community post offices separately, opened in the United Kingdom and in each region and county in each year since 1988.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The number of post offices opened in the United Kingdom in each year since 1988 is as follows:

Year	Number
1988-89	35
1989-90	21
1990-91	63
1991-92	[1]157

[1] includes 74 satellite offices.

The number of community and restricted hours offices operating in rural areas at the end of each financial year was as follows:

	Community offices	Restricted hours
March 1989	724	0
March 1990	1,413	23
March 1991	1,511	55
March 1992	1,626	90

A breakdown of this information by region or by county could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the licence fee for new sub-post offices in each year since 1989; and what income those fees generated in each year.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 February 1993]: For franchised offices a commercially confidential and individual franchise fee is negotiated with each agency partner. For other new or resited post offices an initial fee equivalent to 12 months' remuneration in England and nine months' remuneration in other parts of the United Kingdom is levied. All rural offices are exempted from paying such fees. Since April 1992 initial fees have no longer been levied on transfer of sub-post offices at their existing site.

The overall yield to Post Office Counters Ltd. from franchise and initial fees has been £3·9 million in 1989-90, £9·6 million in 1990-91 and £10·5 million in 1991-92.

Cornwall and Devon

Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what criteria he used to substantiate the application for designation of (a) Cornwall and (b) Devon as economically deprived regions requiring objective 1 status for European Community development assistance; and what effect a separate or joint submission will have on Cornwall's chances of success;

(2) if he will publish his submission to the European Commission seeking designation of Cornwall and Devon as economically deprived regions requiring objective 1 status for development assistance.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The European Council decided at Edinburgh that the future coverage of objective 1 should be determined as article 8(1) of Council regulation (EEC) 2052/88. This states that objective 1 regions shall be regions at NUTS II level whose per capita GDP is less than 75 per cent. of the Community average. It also provides for the inclusion of Northern Ireland and, for special reasons, of other regions whose GDP figure is close to 75 per cent.

Devon and Cornwall together form a NUTS II level region with GDP assessed as being 82 per cent. of the Community average. My right hon. Friend has written to the responsible Commissioner proposing this NUTS II region for objective 1 on the grounds of its relatively low GDP coupled with its peripherality, the effect of defence changes and declining employment in agriculture. I do not consider that it would be appropriate to publish my right hon. Friend's letter.

Cornwall alone is classified as a NUTS III region. Its estimated per capita GDP exceeds not only 75 per cent. of the Community average, but the estimated figures of more then 60 other NUTS III regions in the Community, which are not part of NUTS II regions, likely to be eligible for objective 1 status.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Market Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1991; whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision or whether the service was contracted out; what was the name of the successful contractor where appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Market tests for the following services have taken place:

Travel services

A contract for a new national travel service to this Department and the Department of Health was awarded to Wagons-Lits in January 1993.

Facilities management and the provision of office services at Quarry House, the Department's new headquarters building in Leeds shared with Department of Health.

There was no existing in-house provision, but in-house bids were made for office support services. The contract was awarded to Manpower UK Ltd in June 1992.

Cleaning services for North Fylde Central Offices, Norcross, Blackpool.

Contract awarded to Care Cleaning Services in April 1992.

Building maintenance and works. Contracts for services previously provided by Property Services Agency (PSA) have been awarded to:

Tarmac Construction in April 1992 and June 1992
Henry Boot in May 1992
Laing Management in April 1992
The contract for services to the Fylde Benefit Directorate was won by PSA in April 1992.

Contributions Agency's microfilming and retrievals service.

The contract was awarded to the in-house team in February 1993.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff in his Department are assigned to the market testing programme; how much the programme has cost his Department since November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Currently there are some 150 staff assigned to the market-testing programme. The total cost since November 1991 has been some £1,480,000.

Lambeth (Rent Rebates)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what sum was recovered from Lambeth council in respect of rent rebates in June and July 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Lambeth's payments on account of non-housing revenue account—HRA—rent rebate subsidy were adjusted for these months to reflect the Department's revised estimate for the 1991-92 year. The recovered amounts were offset against the authority's total payments on account. The information is in the table:

1992	Gross payment due (£)	Amount recovered[1] (£)	Net payment due (£)
June
Rent Rebates (non-HRA)	330,750	1,116,940	−786,190
Rent Allowances	2,516,687	0	2,516,687
Community Charge Benefit	895,446	2,752,322	−1,856,876
Administration	126,379	0	126,379
Total	3,869,262	3,869,262	0
July
Rent Rebates (non-HRA)	330,750	1,507,869	−1,177,119
Rent Allowances	2,516,687	0	2,516,687
Community Charge Benefit	895,446	2,361,393	−1,465,947
Administration	126,379	0	126,379
Total	3,869,262	3,869,262	0

[1] Prior year adjustments (1991-92).

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, (Mr. Dobson) Official Report, column 469, what is his Department's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department's current estimate for publicity expenditure in 1992-93 is as follows:—

	£ million
Headquarters DSS	9
Benefits Agency	7·8
Contributions Agency	1·8

Estimated publicity expenditure for 1993-94 is as follows:—

	£ million
Headquarters DSS	7·6
Benefits Agency	9·5
Child Support Agency	4·1
Contributions Agency	1·3

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reply is being made to the letter sent on 4 February by the Terrence Higgins Trust to the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People in regard to the independent living fund; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I will be replying to the letter in due course.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department during 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Scott: Total expenditure was £91,934 in 1991-92 and £94,850 so far in 1992-93.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the total number of people in receipt of either mobility allowance or attendance allowance or both as at the end of March 1992 and (b) the total number of people in receipt of either disability living allowance or attendance allowance at the latest available date.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The information requested is estimated as follows:

(a) 31 March 1992

	Thousands
Benefit	Number of recipients
Attendance Allowance (all ages)	1,059
Mobility Allowance	[1]685
Both Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance	[2]170
Total	1,574

(b) Latest available date

	Thousands
Benefit	Number of recipients
Attendance Allowance (over 65)	[3]719
Disability Living Allownce	[4]1,103
Total	1,822

[1] Figure excludes small number of cases already converted over to Disability Living Allowance.

[2] Figure includes small number of Attendance Allowance cases that have been suspended eg because of hospitalisation.

[3] As at 31 March 1992—the latest date for which data is available.

[4] All data provisional. Figures based on a 5 per cent. sample of live cases on the Disability Living Allowance system at 30 November 1992 with estimates made of both Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance cases awaiting conversion. It will include a small number of suspended cases.

EDUCATION

Newall Green School, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from the governors of Newall Green high school in Manchester in regard to key stage III assessments; what reply he is sending; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend received a letter from the governors of Newall Green high school on 27 January. The Department gave a full reply on 22 February.

The tests are well prepared and will go ahead. My right hon. Friend has recognised that some schools and teachers need a year to get used to the tests. He has, therefore, decided that in future test results will be included in school performance tables from the second year of their introduction nationally. This means that the secondary school performance tables will include the results of the tests in English and technology from 1994.

Student Grants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to remove from local authority control the responsibility to allocate grants and tuition fees to students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend keeps the arrangements for administering student awards under periodic review. If he has any plans for changes, he will announce them at the appropriate time.

Grant-maintained Schools

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) of 17 February, Official Report, column 213, what criteria he will take into account in deciding whether to agree grant-maintained status to an existing indpendent school.

Mr. Forth: In reaching a decision, the Secretary of State will take account of a number of factors similar to those currently applied in respect of applications for new voluntary schools. These will include:

(i) the school's ability to deliver the National Curriculum;
(ii) the suitability of the premises;
(iii) the need, including denominational need, for additional places in the maintained and grant-maintained sectors;
(iv) whether the school will offer equal opportunities for girls and boys;
(v) whether the Funding Authority supports the proposal.

Primary Classes

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will give the figures for the average size of all classes in primary schools in England for each year since 1984;

(2) if he will give the figures for the average size of class taught by one teacher in primary schools in England for each year since 1983.

Mr. Forth: Information about class sizes in maintained primary schools in England for years 1983 to 1992 is given in the table.

Average size of classes in maintained primary schools in England
Position as at Janauary each year

Year	Classes taught by one teacher	All classes
1992	26·4	26·8
1991	26·3	26·8
1990	25·9	26·4
1989	25·7	26·1
1988	25·4	25·9
1987	25·4	25·8
1986	25·5	25·9
1985	24·9	25·2
1984	24·7	25·0
1983	24·8	25·1

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the figures for the percentage of classes taught by one teacher with a class size of over 30 pupils in England in 1991.

Mr. Forth: The percentages of classes with more than 30 pupils being taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in January 1991 were 20 per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively.

Education Authority Budgets

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all education authorities for which he is responsible in order, expressing the percentage of their budget which is not distributed to schools and held back for central administration.

Mr. Forth: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) on 19 October 1992, Official Report, columns 8-12.

Schools Statistics

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the percentage in schools of (a) governors, (b) administrators, (c) inspectors and (d) teachers who are of ethnic minority origins.

Mr. Forth: A survey carried out by the National Foundation for Educational Research in 1990 found that just over 1 per cent. of governors were from ethnic minority groups.

Information on the ethnic origins of administrators and inspectors is not centrally available.

The Government introduced ethnic monitoring of teachers in January 1990 following recommendations by the Swann committee, but response so far has been poor, although it is improving. As a result it is not yet possible to draw conclusions about the percentage of teachers nationally who are from ethnic minorities.

"Choice and Diversity"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on how many occasions he has met Church representatives on matters referred to in the Government White Paper "Choice and Diversity" since its publication; and on what dates.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend met the president of the Methodist Conference on 5 November 1992 and the Bishop of Guildford, chairman of the General Synod board of education, on 9 February to discuss the Government's proposals, set out in the White Paper and embodied in the Education Bill currently before Parliament. He is also scheduled to meet the Churches' Joint Education Policy Committee on 8 March. This is in addition to meetings between my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State and representatives of the churches and meetings of the churches with my officials.

English Tests

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils of key stage 3 age were involved in the pilot studies conducted by the University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate for key stage 3 English on which the proposed tests for 1993 are based.

Mr. Forth: The University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate conducted pilot tests in November 1992 and January this year. Three thousand pupils were involved in the first pilot and 2,700 in the second.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were participating in (a) Action for Community Employment, (b) the youth training programme, (c) the job training programme, (d) the enterprise allowance scheme, (e) job clubs and (f) Restart courses, at the latest available date and in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Restart courses were discontinued in Northern Ireland in March 1989. Otherwise the information is as follows:

	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93[2]
Action for Community Employment	10,073	10,072	9,660
Youth training programme	12,914	15,480	14,079

Job clubs	1,427	1,933	1,675
Enterprise allowance scheme	818	537	[1]—

[1] Since 1 April 1992 the enterprise allowance scheme has been replaced by the business start programme which is an amalgamation of the enterprise allowance and the Local Enterprise Development Unit's enterprise grant scheme.

[2] April to January.

Newry and Armagh

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total population in each ward within the constituency of Newry and Armagh.

Mr. Hanley: The most recent estimates of the total resident population in each of the local government wards covered by the Newry and Armagh constituency are set out in the table. The information is taken from the "Summary Report of the Northern Ireland Census 1991", a copy of which is in the Library.

Births

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many babies were born at each of the hospitals in Londonderry, Omagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Armagh, Newry and Craigavon in 1992; and how many of the mothers at each hospital were domiciled in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not available in the exact form requested. The table shows the number of live and still births at hospitals in Londonderry, Omagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Newry and Craigavon for the financial year 1991-92. The number of mothers at each hospital domiciled in the Republic of Ireland is shown in brackets. Armagh community hospital provides obstetric out-patient clinics only.

Housing Grants

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many grant applications were received in each Northern Ireland Housing Executive grants office since the commencement of the provision in the Housing Order 1992; and how many applications were (i) approved, (ii) refused and (iii) under consideration.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but the chief executive has advised me that the information requested is as follows:—

Grants Office	Received	Refused	Under consideration	Approved	Withdrawn
North East Region
Ballymena	477	46	431	—	—

Total	9,083	742	8,175	2	164

The executive is giving priority to dealing with the backing of cases received prior to the introduction of the new scheme on 1 October 1992. This must be cleared by the end of March.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will give details of the formulae employed as part of the income assessment of Northern Ireland Housing Executive grant applicants;

(2) if he will give details of the income levels which are acceptable to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for grant purposes.

Mr. Atkins: If a grant applicant and all other relevant persons are in receipt of income support, full grant up to the cost of the approved works is payable.

In all other cases, a test of resources is applied to determine how much, if anything, an applicant and other relevant persons may have to contribute towards the cost of the approved works. The balance of the costs will be met by grant.

The test sets income and capital returns against appropriate allowances. Any resultant excess of income over allowances is translated into a borrowing power, to determine the amount which individual grant applicants are deemed to be able to contribute towards the cost of the works. The treatment of income and capital, the various allowances and the formula for arriving at the borrowing power, are contained in the House Renovation etc. Grants (Reduction of Grant) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1992—statutory rule 1992 No. 412—copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. There is no income bar on applications for housing grant.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average waiting period for a housing applicant in the A1 priority category in each district office of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and what were the comaprable waiting periods for each of the past five years.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by the chief executive that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many orders for mortgage repossessions have occurred in each constituency in Northern Ireland in the past 12 months.

Mr. Atkins: Statistics show that in Northern Ireland as a whole 633 orders to repossess both domestic and commercial mortgaged properties were issued in 1992, compared with 832 in 1991.

A breakdown by constituency is not available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Quangos

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his oral reply of 15 February, Official Report, column 15, if he will list the 800 quangos abolished by the Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: The figure 800 refers to the difference between the number of non-departmental public bodies in 1979—2,167 and 1992—1,412. It does not correspond to a single list of abolished bodies because there have been both creations and abolitions throughout the period. Further information is given in "Public Bodies", published annually since 1982 and available in the Library of the House.

Research and Development

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, columns 300-4, about the framework research development programmes, what were the values in pounds sterling of the payments shown in tables B and C at the time the payments were made.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information given in table B in my answer of 18 February, Official Report, columns 300-4, is the breakdown of expenditure for the third framework programme covering the period 1990-94. The amounts deemed necessary for the specific areas were agreed in April 1990. The supplementary funding was agreed in December 1992. Table 1 sets out the sums for the programme as it was initially adopted in April 1990 in pounds sterling at the rate of exchange prevailing at that time—£1 = 1·351 ecu—and for the supplementary funding at the exchange rate prevailing in December 1992—£1 = 1·253 ecu. The drawing down of these sums will take place over a period extending beyond 1994.

The information on payments made to date under the third framework programme was shown in table D of my previous answer. These payments took place between October and December 1991 and table 2 shows their value in pounds sterling based on the average rate of exchange over that period—£1 = 1·413 ecu.

Table C of my answer of 18 February contains information on thousands of contracts let at different times during the period 1987-1991. Information on payments in pounds sterling, at the time each specific payment was made, would be obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Publicity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 419, what is his Office's (a) current outturn estimate for publicity expenditure for 1992-93 and (b) budgeted publicity expenditure for 1993-94.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Duchy of Lancaster's expenditure on advertising for qualifying beneficiaries in connection with the administration of intestacies in the duchy area for the year ending 30 September 1992 was £25,676·89. Estimated expenditure for 1993 is £24,500 and for 1994 is £25,000.

Estimated expenditure on advertising for the recruitment of magistrates in the duchy area for 1993 is £2,500.

WALES

Public Bodies

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will specify the cost of administering all non-departmental public bodies broken down by (a) executive bodies, (b) advisory bodies, (c) tribunals and (d) national health service bodies for which his Department has responsibility in Wales, during each of the last three years.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure directly incurred by the Welsh Office on administering its executive and advisory non-departmental public bodies and tribunals for the relevant years is shown in the annual publication, "Public Bodies" for 1990, 1991 and 1992. Copies are available in the Library of the House. Comparable figures in respect of national health service bodies are not readily available, and I will write to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to instruct all non-departmental public bodies operational in Wales to (a) consult community and town councils in Wales regarding finance for schemes affecting their communities and (b) provide reasons in writing to community and town councils when their representations to such bodies are not accepted.

Mr. David Hunt: No. This is a matter for the bodies themselves.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office has awarded contracts to five of the firms mentioned. These are as follows:

i. OVER THE PAST 12 MONTHS

Coopers and Lybrand Management Consultants
Assistance with the preparation of the market testing programme.

Touche Ross Management Consultants
Evaluation of the Teamcare Valleys project.
Investment appraisal: cancer treatment services in North Wales.
Financial modelling of local government reorganisation.
Welsh Office Internal Audit: assistance with market test.
Review of the transfer of regional oral plastic and maxillo facial surgery services.
Option appraisal: acquisition of property for the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

Price Waterhouse Management Consultants
Assistance with 1992-93 Market testing programme.

KPMG Management Consultants
Innovation Network Wales: assessment of innovation encouragement in Wales.
Adequacy and accuracy of agent authority (roads) accounts.
Study into the future of the Welsh Office's in-house computer bureau.
Advice on commercial, legal and financial issues arising from the establishment of local authority waste disposal companies.
Appraisal of applications for NHS Trust status in 1993.

ii. 1991-92

Coopers and Lybrand Management Consultants
Review of local management of schools in Wales.
Assistance with the preparation of the market testing programme.
Health Intelligence Unit: preparation of business plan.

Touche Ross Management Consultants
Survey of financial control and management arrangements in further and higher education establishments.

Option appraisal: cardiac services in South Wales.
Breast Test Wales: preparation of business procurement plans.

Ernst and Young Management Consultants
End-year procedures for the Department's AS400 computer system.

KPMG Management Consultants
New product development study.

Details of costs cannot be disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

South Wales Valleys (Development)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to initiate a community development strategy for the south Wales valley areas.

Mr. David Hunt: I will be announcing my intentions shortly on what will succeed the programme for the valleys. Community development will continue to play an important part in my proposals.

Social Care Planning

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will amend the guidance notes for social care planning to secure that specific forums are established by local authorities to examine local housing demands.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have no plans to do so.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are currently accommodated in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in each rural local authority area in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally.

University Hospital of Wales (Catering)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the state of the proceedings relating to the South Glamorgan health authority catering contract at the University hospital of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The application for leave to apply for judicial review is the subject of continuing correspondence between the solicitors for the applicants and the Treasury Solicitors Department acting for the Secretary of State and the South Glamorgan health authority.

Business Rate

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to adjust the poundage rates applied to the uniform business rate in Wales in line with the poundage levels set for England.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. The poundage for Wales and England were set in 1990 at a level which ensured that the overall yield from non-domestic ratepayers remained at the 1989-90 level in real terms. The Welsh poundage was set at a higher rate than the English poundage in 1990 because of lower rateable values in Wales. Since 1990, the poundages in Wales and England have been uprated each year in line with the annual increase in the retail prices index as at September of the preceding year.

The loss of revenue consequent on a real-terms reduction in the Welsh poundage would have to be met from either increased revenue support grant or by the imposition of higher council tax bills on the people of Wales.

Social Care Plans

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local authorities on the involvement of housing providers in the formulation of social care plans.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Appropriate guidance has been issued, notably as regards the preparation of housing strategies and operational plans.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish further cost details of the commitments and actions on the environment listed at figure 7.02 of his Department's annual report, 1993, Cm 221.

Mr. David Hunt: Cost details of most of these commitments and actions were set out within the publication "The Environment in Wales: Second Report", and further details have recently been given in the various relevant chapters of the departmental report for 1993-94 to 1995-96. It is not yet possible to attribute specific costs to the remainder of the commitments and actions.

Reservoirs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to make adaptations to drinking water reservoirs in Wales to enable them to be connected into dual-purpose hydro-generators.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the commercial judgment and decision of the relevant water companies.

European Environmental Agency

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make representations to the European Community to advocate Wales as a possible location for the new European Environmental Agency.

Mr. David Hunt: Cambridge was chosen as the United Kingdom bid for the location of the new European Environmental Agency in 1990, after a long consultation process. There are no plans to reconsider this decision.

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many skilled or semi-skilled jobs have been lost in the manufacturing sector in each local authority area in Wales in each of the last two years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available.

Truancy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the absence rate in each of the local education authorities in Wales in the secondary section; what measures he proposes to reduce these rates; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Although information about absence rates is not collected centrally, details of attendance rates can be found in table 1.09 of "Statistics of Education and Training in Wales: Schools No. 1 1993", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. It is our intention for details of absence rates on an individual school basis to be published and we will shortly be issuing a consultation paper which addresses this issue amongst others.

It is, however, for local education authorities to ensure that parents are fulfilling their statutory obligations as to their children's education.

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, in 1992-93 prices and cash terms, the total amount spent of the budget for training for Wales in each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn in 1992-93 and plans for 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the following table:

Local Government

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the latest conclusions of the sub-group on internal management submitted to the Welsh Consultative Council on local government reform.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his reply, 4 February 1993, column 337]: The final report of the internal management sub-group has now been considered by the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government. I have placed a copy of this report in the Library of the House.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the results of his review of regional assisted areas in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The representations received about the review of assisted areas are currently being considered. The Government hope to be able to make an announcement on the result of the review as soon as possible, taking into account the outcome of the coal review and subject to receiving European Commission clearance.

ENVIRONMENT

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

19. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in putting out local services to compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Robin Squire: A wide range of local authority services are subject to CCT, including highway and building construction and maintenance, refuse collection, street sweeping, grounds maintenance, and catering. Last November my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the extension of CCT to a further range of local authority professional and corporate services.

22. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the development of compulsory competitive tendering on housing management.

29. Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the development of compulsory competitive tendering on housing management.

Sir George Young: The Housing and Urban Development Bill contains provisions which pave the way for the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering to local authority housing management. It is anticipated that regulations governing the detailed operation and implementation of local authority housing management CCT will be introduced later this year.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that all local authorities apply compulsory competitive tendering with equal rigour; and which county councils are in the bottom quartile of performance in this area.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) earlier today.

Urban Programme

20. Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the effects of the abolition of the urban programme on his inner-city strategy.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the Member for Bristol, East (Ms. Corston) earlier today.

23. Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Leeds area on the effects of the abolition of the urban programme on his inner-city strategy.

Mr. Howard: The urban programme has not been abolished. There will be a substantial programme in 1993-94 amounting to £176 million, which will enable us to honour in full existing commitments and provide £20 million for urban partnership fund projects as part of the new capital partnership programme. Planned resources for my Department's urban group of programmes for 1993-94 will increase by over £90 million; total spending will be over £1 billion.

Mineral Planning

21. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the outcome of the consultations relating to the mineral planning guidance note 3.

Mr. Baldry: I announced on 15 July 1992 the Government's intention to revise the current planning guidelines on opencast coal which are contained in minerals planning guidance note 3. Draft revised guidance will be issued for public consultation as soon as possible following the outcome of the coal review.

Eco-labelling

24. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the first EC eco-labels to be issued in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The European Commission recently announced that the eco-labelling scheme would be launched in June and that they expected to have agreed the criteria for a range of product groups by then. The number and timing of awards will depend on industry's response to the scheme and whether there are any objections to the proposed awards.

Retail Development

25. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding his Department's draft planning policy guidance PPG6 (revised) on town centres and retail development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have received about 550 responses to the draft, and I expect to publish the revised guidance in the spring.

Empty Council Properties

26. Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 local authorities with the highest number of empty council homes.

Mr. Baldry: In the latest housing investment programme returns, the 10 councils reporting the highest percentage of their council house stock empty on 1 April 1992 were:

	Empty dwellings
Liverpool	5,552
Hackney	2,432
Burnley	368
Manchester	4,938
Salford	1,661
North Tyneside	1,082
Redbridge	373
Tower Hamlets	1,703
Easington	619
Newcastle upon Tyne	1,562

These figures cover management vacants and those which are empty awaiting sale, major repairs or demolition.

I am considering whether to put greater emphasis on a more selective definition that would better reflect underlying trends in local authorities' management performance.

Rented Accommodation

27. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he intends to announce to increase the availability of specialist and low-cost accommodation for rent in areas of high house prices.

Sir George Young: Housing associations are now the main providers of new social housing for rent. The Government make capital resources available to them through the approved development programme (ADP) of the Housing Corporation, which also provides revenue support to special needs schemes.

The allocation of the ADP between and within regions is determined by the housing needs indicator (HNI), a composite, relative indicator of the incidence of housing needs which takes account of many factors, including the number of people unable to afford to buy their own homes.

The corporation estimates that over the three years from 1992-93 to 1994-95, 170,000 new social homes will be provided by housing associations in England—far more than the 153,000 originally forecast. Measures taken to encourage the private rented sector and to make better use of empty homes within the public sector should also increase the supply of housing for rent.

Housing Associations

28. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties have been bought by housing associations using the additional sums allocated to them in the autumn statement.

Mr. Baldry: The latest figures from the Housing Corporation show that by 19 February approvals for the purchase of 16,666 properties had been granted, with 5,755 purchases actually completed. This means that already our original target of 16,000 purchases has been exceeded, using only 93 per cent. of the funds allocated. The corporation now estimates that housing associations in England will be able to buy over 17,000 homes for those in need as a result of the allocation in the autumn statement. Another 3,500 purchases will be made possible through cash grants to tenants to become home owners. I congratulate the corporation and housing associations involved on their excellent work.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future funding of small and medium-sized housing associations.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation's allocations are made in response to competitive bidding by housing associations. In 1992-93, just over half the Housing Corporation's main programme funds were allocated to housing associations with fewer than 2,500 units of stock. The allocations for 1993-94 will be announced shortly and I fully expect small and medium-sized associations to continue to be well represented among developing associations.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is in a position to announce the distribution among local authority areas of the Housing Corporation's allocations to housing associations in 1993-94.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce the allocation to local authority areas of new approvals to be made by the Housing Corporation under its 1993-94 approved development programme. Copies of a table containing the information have been placed in the Library of the House. The corporation is itself writing to individual housing associations with details of their 1993-94 allocations.

The corporation estimates that, next year, the ADP will fund the completion of 54,500 homes, including 10,000 for low-cost home ownership. This is an increase of 3,300 on the 51,200 completions anticipated for 1993-94 a year ago. In addition, the housing market package announced in the autumn statement has added an extra 19,000 units to this year's programme to achieve a total of 120,000 new housing association lettings across these two years, compared with the 94,600 anticipated at the time of the 1992-93 ADP.

The ADP continues to provide good value for money. Competitive bidding between housing associations, consortium deals with developers, and the provision by local authorities of land at nil or reduced cost mean that the corporation expects to approve between 10 per cent. and 20 per cent. more units in 1993-94 than was estimated when decisions were announced in December about the national breakdown of the ADP. This would mean an additional 4,240 to 8,480 new homes for people in need.

Decisions on the ADP and local authority housing investment programmes (HIPs) are now taken within a co-ordinated framework. As I announced at the time of the HIP settlement in December, local authorities, the Housing Corporation and local housing associations have co-operated closely in preparing local programmes as part of a single housing strategy, and we have been able to consider the two programmes in parallel.

Local Government Finance

30. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have increased their indebtedness in the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 249 local authorities are known to have increased their external debt between March 1982 and March 1992. This represents 69 per cent. of authorities for whom figures are available; data are unavailable for 40 authorities.

Local Government (Corruption)

31. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on corruption in local government.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities, to my hon. Friend the member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham).

Local Government Restructuring (Lancashire)

32. Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will visit Blackpool to discuss the restructuring of local government in Lancashire.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit Blackpool in the immediate future.

House Building

33. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest year-on-year figures for public sector house building; and what is the comparative figure for 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Provisional figures show that in England in 1992 there were 20,700 housebuilding completions by housing associations and 2,900 completions by local authorities, new towns and Government Departments. The comparative figures for 1979 are 16,300 by housing associations, and 74,800 by local authorities, new towns and Government Departments.

These figures are derived from records for building control purposes. It is sometimes difficult for local authorities, or the National House Building Council, which is responsible for building control, to identify whether a dwelling is being built for a housing association or for a private developer. This may lead to an understatement of housing association starts.

In addition the figures cover only the construction of new dwellings, and exclude rehabilitation, purchases of existing stock and incentive payments made to tenants in order to release homes for reletting. If these are included, new units of social housing made available through housing associations funded by the Housing Corporation's approved development programme is expected to total 65,000 units in this financial year, together with around 5,000 units funded by local authority housing association grant and some 3,400 local authority units freed by the cash incentive scheme of grants to enable local authority tenants to become home owners.

Refurbishment

34. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the National Federation of Council Leaseholders regarding costs of refurbishment schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The federation has made representations concerning the level of contributions demanded from council leaseholders towards costs of major works.

I am aware that in some areas high service charge bills can cause difficulties and I have commissioned research to find out how widespread the problem is.

Market Testing

35. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider extending market testing to a range of his own Department's activities.

Mr. Howard: My Department is already market testing a range of its own activities, of which the main ones are listed in the citizens charter first report (Cm 2101). But that list also includes the testing of some services which have been provided to the Department by hitherto monopoly suppliers.

Planning Applications (Objectors)

36. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to give objectors to planning applications a right of appeal to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Crime Prevention

37. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account is taken in the current year's revenue grant settlement to local authorities of their responsibilities in crime prevention.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is no provision in the revenue support grant settlement which is earmarked specifically for crime prevention. Within the overall resources provided, however, police and probation services do undertake a range of functions directed towards crime prevention and reduction.

Local Government Employment

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of changes in employment in local government between 1990-91 and 1992-93.

Mr. Howard: Over the period I estimate that the number of people employed by local government has reduced by about 75,000, the equivalent of 52,000 full-time posts or 2·8 per cent.

Nitrate Pollution

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the impact on public water supplies of nitrate pollution.

Mr. Maclean: Water supplies in the 2,577 water supply zones in England and Wales are routinely monitored to check their levels of nitrate against the standard of 50 milligrams per litre which is set in the relevant regulations of 1989. Most zones comply fully with this standard but, in 1991, breaches of this standard were found in 94 zones. The water companies have in place improvement programmes to secure compliance with the standard for nitrate by the end of 1995 at the latest.

House Condition Survey

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the results of the English house condition survey 1991 will be made available; and what will be their role in the allocation of specified capital grant resources for the English regions in 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: Results from the 1991 English house condition survey will be published this year. It is planned that, for 1994-95, figures from the 1991 survey will replace the 1986 figures currently used in the formulae for the allocation of specific capital grant to English regions.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects the house condition survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The results of the English house condition survey will be published this year.

Watch Your Waste Week

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to mark Watch Your Waste Week in March; and what proposals he has for the future of the event.

Mr. Maclean: The Department, in conjunction with Waste Watch, has been encouraging local authorities, voluntary groups and industry to participate in Watch Your Waste Week. The week is being launched in London on 18 March and a range of events is being planned throughout the country.

The Department also plans to have a stand at the ideal home exhibition, March 18 to April 12, which will focus, amongst other issues, on recycling.

I would encourage all hon. Members to participate in the week. I have put details about the week in the Library of the House.

Our aims for the campaign are to increase awareness of how people can reduce, re-use and recycle their waste and also to encourage them to buy products which minimise waste or are made from recycled products. We will consider, in the light of its effectiveness, whether or not the week should be repeated.

Empty Properties

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of empty properties purchased by housing associations or other bodies as a result of the policy changes announced in the autumn statement and the number which have been used to provide additional social housing.

Mr. Baldry: The latest figures from the Housing Corporation show that by 19 February approvals for the purchase of 16,666 properties had been granted, with 5,755 purchases actually completed. This means that already our original target of 16,000 purchases has been exceeded, using only 93 per cent. of the funds allocated, and nearly 6,000 families have been housed. The corporation now estimates that housing associations in England will be able to buy over 17,000 homes for those in need as a result of the allocation in the autumn statement. Another 3,500 purchases will be made possible through cash grants to local authority and housing association tenants to become home owners. All the homes purchased by housing associations or freed by existing tenants will be used to provide additional social housing. I congratulate the corporation and housing associations involved on their excellent work.

National Parks

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to bring forward legislation concerning the national parks in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: Our policy statement on the national parks, published in January 1992, promised legislation to create independent authorities for the eight national parks in England and Wales currently run as county council committees. I fully recognise the importance of introducing national park legislation at the earliest opportunity and I have repeatedly said that we will do so.

Urban Partnership

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 12 February to the hon. Member for Wyre Forest, (Mr. Coombs), Official Report, column 835, what was the total value of the bids put forward for urban partnership; and if he will list the successful authorities with (a) the value of the bids put forward, (b) the number of projects put forward, (c) the value of bids accepted and (d) the number of projects supported.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total value of the bids submitted for a share of the urban partnership fund (UPF) was £82·1 million. The table lists for the successful authorities (a) the value of bids submitted, and (b) the number of projects/packages of projects submitted. A full list of proposed projects, together with the amount of UPF support which has been agreed in principle for each, has been placed in the Library of the House. It is open to local authorities to take forward proposals which have not been offered UPF support using their capital receipts and any private sector or other contributions.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the operation of the law relating to the powers for a water company or others to cause a disconnection of a domestic consumer's water supply.

Mr. Maclean: The Director General of Water Services issued guidelines to water companies last year on a consistent and fair approach towards customers with unpaid charges. This followed a review of companies' policy and practice. He is now considering reports from the regional customer service committees on the effectiveness of the guidelines and will be considering what further action may be necessary. It is right that bills should be paid, but equally that water companies should provide every assistance to customers who are having difficulty meeting their bills.

Construction Industry

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken to assist the construction industry.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 27 January 1993 to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) at columns 762-63.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of total carbon dioxide emissions is accounted for by domestic consumption of energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Emissions of carbon dioxide from domestic sources in the United Kingdom have been estimated at 14 per cent. of total emissions in 1990.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of output of carbon dioxide in the United Kingdom in (a) 1992 and (b) 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Estimated emissions of CO_2 in the United Kingdom in 1991 and 1992 are not yet available. My Department aims to publish 1991 figures, broken down by emission source, by type of fuel, and by final user of energy, in April in the annual "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics (No. 15)".

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which tenants' groups have put forward proposals for housing action trusts since the announcement of the citizens charter.

Sir George Young: We have had approaches from:

Norris Green Tenants and Homeowners Association, Liverpool

Fern Lodge Estate Tenants and Residents Association, Streatham, London

St. George's Residents Association, Gloucester Grove Estate, Peckham, London

Harris Street Neighbourhood Forum (Elmington Estate), Camberwell, London

Norfolk Park Tenants and Residents Association and St. Aidan's Tenants Association, Norfolk Park Estate, Sheffield

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide details of the breakdown of expenditure on departmental publicity relating to housing matters for 1992-93.

Sir George Young: As at 23 February 1993 my Department has committed £1·86 million for publicity expenditure on housing and urban programme policies. The breakdown is as follows:

Advertising—media and production	1,007,500
Printing—design and production	474,400
Exhibitions—stand space and production	127,300
Audio Visual—design and production	13,300
Promotions	65,000
Fulfilment—response and postages	53,200
Conferences—room hire and organisation	117,800
Miscellaneous—small items, badges, etc.	1,500

Darwin Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings of his advisory committee under the chairmanship of Sir Crispin Tickell on the Darwin initiative have taken place; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the Darwin initiative.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Milligan) on 17 February at column 282.

Ministers' Private Residences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the Ministers who have received public funds for approved work on their private residences arising from their ministerial duties.

Mr. Howard: I can answer only in respect of my own Department. There has been no such expenditure on the homes of current DOE Ministers other than strictly for security purposes. It is not in the public interest to disclose or aid the identification of security arrangements relating to public figures.

EC Eco-audit Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the EC eco-audit scheme.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend on 20 January 1993 to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) at column 267, in which he reported that the Council had reached broad agreement to the proposal.

The Government hope that the proposal will be adopted during the Danish presidency.

Housing Legislation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, in order, all the primary housing legislation passed by the Government since 1979.

Sir George Young: The table lists, in order, the Acts directly related to housing in England passed by Parliament since 1979.

1980—Housing Act
1983—Mobile Homes Act
1984—Housing and Building Control Act
1984—Housing Defects Act
1985—Housing Act[1]
1985—Housing Associations Act[1]
1985—Housing (Consequential Provisions) Act[1]
1985—Landlord and Tenant Act[1]
1985—Rent (Amendment) Act
1986—Housing and Planning Act
1987—Landlord and Tenant Act
1988—Housing Act
1989—Local Government and Housing Act

---

[1] Consolidation not new legislation.

Other primary legislation indirectly related to housing includes:

1980—Local Government, Planning and Land Act
1982—Social Security and Housing Benefits Act
1983—Matrimonial Homes Act
1983—Social Security and Housing Benefits Act
1984—Building Act
1984—Registered Homes Act
1986—Building Societies Act
1986—Social Security Act
1987—Access to Personal Files Act
1988—Landlord and Tenant Act
1989—Social Security Act
1990—Social Security Act
1991—Registered Homes (Amendment) Act
1992—Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act
1992—Social Security Administration Act.

Drinking Water

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been taken out by the drinking water inspectorate against water supply companies for failure of drinking water standards.

Mr. Maclean: Legislation does not provide for water companies to be prosecuted for failure to meet drinking water quality standards. A criminal offence has been created of supplying water unfit for human consumption. There have been no prosecutions of water companies to date, but the drinking water inspectorate is investigating a small number of incidents which may lead to prosecution.

Revenue Support Grant

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of revenue support grant per head in (a) Pendle, (b) Ribble Valley, (c) the City of Westminster, (d) Wandsworth and (e) the City of London for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is as follows:

	RSG per head 1992-93 £	RSG per head 1993-94 £
Pendle	325·65	49·62
Ribble Valley	292·92	13·64
City of Westminster	958·85	802·79
Wandsworth	714·59	619·18
City of London	10,771·14	11,225·31

The figures for the two years are not comparable since revenue support grant for the year 1993-94 is to be paid direct to each billing and major precepting authority, whereas in 1992-93 it was all paid into the collection fund administered by the charging authority.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much rate or revenue support grant per head of population has been given in total to each of the metropolitan authorities since 1980; and how much extra grant Sheffield would have received over that period if it had received (a) the grant per head of the highest recipient authority and (b) the grant per head of the average of all authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 2 February 1993]: The amount of rate or revenue support grant in total for each metropolitan district authority for the period 1980-81 to 1993-94 inclusive divided by the average resident population over that period is given in the table. Sheffield would have received an extra £918 million if it had received the grant per head of the highest recipient authority and an extra £286 million an average of £20·4 million for each year if it had received the average grant per head of the metropolitan districts. Sheffield's total RSG over the period was £1,535·2 million.

SCOTLAND

Gartnavel Hospital (Deaths)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths have occurred in the past five years after patients placed under supervision in Gartnavel hospital, Glasgow, have left the hospital.

Mr. Stewart: On the understanding that all in-patients are under supervision during their stay in hospital, four Gartnavel Royal patients have died in the past five years having left the hospital without being discharged.

Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many agency nurses were employed in each health board in each year since 1989.

Mr. Stewart: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. The table shows the average whole-time equivalent of the agency nurses working in health boards at 30 September each year.

[5] Grampian Health Board includes agency hours at Aberdeen Royal Hospitals NHS Trust.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance has been given to health boards to ensure that student nurses are not unemployed when they qualify.

Mr. Stewart: None. The matching of newly qualified nurses to vacancies is best handled at local level. The majority of newly qualified nurses find employment on completion of their training, but student nurses are made aware at the start of their training that employment is not guaranteed at the end of their course.

Set-aside Land

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what area of agricultural land in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scoland as a whole is set aside under the common agricultural policy; and what is its annual value.

Sir Hector Monro: In 1991-92, 674 hectares in Strathclyde and 27,415 hectares in Scotland were set aside under the provisions of the common agricultural policy. Set-aside grant payments in respect of those areas amounted to £103,573 and £4,706,725 respectively. Details of land set aside in 1992-93 are not yet available.

Marine Laboratory, Aberdeen

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what consideration he has given to conferring next steps agency status on the marine laboratory in Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has had with (a) staff, (b) the fishing industry, (c) local councils and (d) right hon. or hon. Members, regarding the possibility of conferring next steps agency status on the marine laboratory in Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given by my right hon. Friend on 18

November 1992 at column 271, stating that the Scottish Office's fisheries research service (FRS) is being considered as a candidate for next steps agency status. The senior management of FRS are fully engaged in this consideration, and staff are being kept informed. The House will be informed of any final decision, in the normal way.

Archaeological Sites

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his assessment of the damage caused by the recent strong gales on archaeological sites in (a) Orkney, (b) Shetland, (c) St. Ninian's Isle and (d) the Western Isles;

(2) what action he proposes to take to help rescue-archaeology in the Scottish islands;

(3) what is the preliminary assessment on materials from Jarlshof sent by his Department for expert analysis in Aberdeen in relation to oil films.

Sir Hector Monro: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to Historic Scotland under its chief executive Mr. Graeme Munro. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Graeme N. Munro to Mr. Tam Dalyell, dated 24 February 1993.

As Chief Executive of Historic Scotland I am writing in response to your three Parliamentary Questions of 23 February to the Secretary of State for Scotland about rescue archaeology in the Scottish islands, the effect of the recent storms on archaeological sites in the Western Isles, Orkney and Shetland (including St. Ninian's Isle) and the preliminary assessment by the Robert Gordon University of the impact of oil from the Braer on stones from Jarlshof.

Coastal erosion is the most serious single issue facing archaeological sites in the Scottish islands. In addition (and principally in Orkney) agricultural improvement operations in recent decades have resulted in destruction of or damage to a number of sites. However, with changes to agricultural and crofting grant schemes in the last few years such damage has reduced. Further, section 17 of the 1986 Agriculture Act effectively requires the Minister to take account of archaeological features when assessing agricultural and grant proposals. Historic Scotland has participated in Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department training courses on section 17 to ensure that staff have an awareness of archaeological features and give them appropriate consideration in terms of the statutory requirements. Historic Scotland has included in its programme of archaeological work for 1993/4 an investigation of those small burial mounds in Orkney particularly vulnerable to destruction through agricultural improvements. Other threats do arise; for instance, Historic Scotland commissioned excavation of the neolithic settlement at Barnhouse, near Stenness in Orkney, to help prevent further damage by agricultural ploughing of long-ploughed ground. I hope that publication of the proposed National Planning Policy Guideline and associated Planning Advice Note on archaeology will lead to prevention of damage to archaeological sites through development, or at least to its mitigation. On most issues, we rely largely on liaison with Islands archaeologists to alert us to sites where rescue excavation may be desirable. In addition, scheduled sites are inspected regularly by Historic Scotland monument wardens.

Coastal erosion is unpredictable. Sites can be stable for decades; but can at almost any time be damaged by a conjunction of unfavourable tides, barometric pressures and windes. Historic Scotland and its predecessors have over the past 15 years arranged rescue surveys (Table 1) and excavations at many sites in the Scottish islands, and in particular at 35 archaeological sites and groups of sites in response to the threat of coastal erosion (Table 2). We are giving priority now to completing publication of the majority of those surveys and excavations before embarking on any further major works to protect or excavate sites.

Local Authorities are the lead organisations for coastal protection, and future protective measures or excavations should be considered along with other coastal issues: archaeology has been included in the brief for consultants reporting to the Scottish Office on coastal issues prior to preparation of a Review of Scottish Coastal Issues.

The recent storms are but one episode in a continuing story of damage to archaeological sites in the coastal erosion zone. Our response illustrates the way in which, pending further consideration of coastal issues, Historic Scotland can build on previous work to react to such episodes. Inspectors from Historic Scotland have visited a selection of sites damaged by the January storms on Orkney, Shetland and the Western Isles. The Orkney Islands Archaeologist plans detailed inspection of damage to sites in Orkney with financial support from Historic Scotland. Historic Scotland will fund at least one small excavation in Orkney (at Tuquoy, supplementing previous work) and plans further detailed assessment at the Brough of Birsay as a consequence of storm damage.

Historic Scotland has arranged sampling at one damaged site in the Western Isles; other sites visited by an Inspector and damaged in the storms had been sampled previously; no systematic survey is planned at this time but this positiion will be reviewed in April following submission of reports covering survey and excavations in the Western Isles (see Table 2).

Historic Scotland has had no request from the Shetland Islands archaeologist for emergency assessment of sites following the January storms; no systematic survey is planned. A further inspection by officers of Historic Scotland is planned for late February when I shall myself be visiting Shetland.

Assessment of the effects of pollution from oil spilled from the Braer wreck on Jarlshof and neighbouring sites has already commenced. We sent one soil and 9 stone samples from the Jarlshof site to the Robert Gordon University Faculty of Science and Technology on 20 January to enable them to undertake a preliminary analysis of the extent of pollution. The intention was to help Historic Scotland clarify its position regarding a possible clean up of the site following the Braer oil tanker wreck and to assist in determining what appropriate conservation measures should be taken.

The preliminary results indicate that the site is contaminated with crude oil residues. In the absence of an authentic sample of the Braer's cargo, it has not yet been possible to confirm that the ship was the source of the contamination, though the circumstances very strongly suggest it.

There is as yet insufficient information upon which to decide the most appropriate course of action. A programme of further short, and longer term, monitoring is needed. This will look at the effects of the contamination on the biological growth on the stonework, the way it affects the weathering of the stone, and how it may alter the aesthetic appearance.

To undertake this effectively, an on site monitoring programme is envisaged which would run in parallel with a detailed literature search. This would help put the study into a broader scientific context. In addition, laboratory and field studies of the effects of remedial or preventative actions would also be instigated. The work would be carried out in conjunction with other research programmes instigated by The Scottish Office and undertaken by the Macaulay Land Use Research Institute.

I believe that Historic Scotland's record of activity at sites suffering from coastal erosion and other threats in the Scottish islands, summarised in the attached tables, demonstrates our concern and our willingness to respond. By its very nature, rescue excavation is reactive. We are seeking to ensure that wherever possible responses are made within a strategic framework.

Thus the actions which Historic Scotland on behalf of the Secretary of State for Scotland proposes to take to help rescue-archaeology in the Scottish Islands build on those which Historic Scotland has taken in the past. Historic Scotland is putting considerable effort into publication of those sites which have already been excavated, and it is reviewing the relative cost-effectiveness of further rescue excavations and protection. It is also taking measures to increase awareness of archaeological sites in other Scottish Office departments and to improve the coordination of protection and rescue activities and to ensure harmonisation with the work of other agencies.

Drugs

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held with organisations in (a) Inverclyde and (b) Strathclyde in relation to ways of dealing with drug problems; what proposals he has put forward for Scottish Office assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 February 1993]: Drug misuse in Strathclyde is a matter of continuing concern to my right hon. Friend; and the Scottish Office is in regular contact with statutory and voluntary bodies in the area. Assistance, through funding, in tackling drug misuse is provided directly and indirectly by the Scottish Office in a number of ways. In particular, Strathclyde regional council is receiving support through the urban programme for drug-related projects, including the Inverclyde Drugline.

Student Housing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of payments from Scottish Homes to the student housing sector in each year since 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 February 1993]: Scottish Homes estimates that nearly £1·2 million was paid in 1990-91 and £0·9 million in 1991-92 towards providing accommodation specifically for students. Students may also have access to other general needs housing funded by Scottish Homes.

Superquarries

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites which have been identified in Scotland as having potential for the development of superquarries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The Scottish Development Department's 1977 national planning guidelines on aggregate working provisionally identified five potential locations for superquarry development: Peterhead, Loch Linnhe, Helmsdale, Harris and the Ross of Mull. In 1980 a subsequent preliminary research report entitled "Potential for a Large Coastal Quarry in Scotland" produced a short-list of five locations with suitable mineral deposits and marine access. These were South Harris, Loch Ewe, Loch Linnhe, Kentallen, and Walls (Shetland Isles). In addition, the Highland region structure plan (approved in 1990) identified Loch Eriboll. More recently a study by ARUP consultants for the Department of the Environment identified a number of broad locations in Scotland where the geological and other technical criteria exist for the development of coastal superquarries ie Shetland, the Western Isles and parts of the west and north coast. The draft national planning policy guidelines on land for mineral working published in 1992 do not specify any other locations.

Any proposals for the development of coastal superquarries will be assessed on their merits and full regard will be had to their possible environmental impact.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the vessels and tonnage of vessels owned or operated by the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency; and which are registerd on the fishing vessel register.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency owns seven fishery protection vessels and two research vessels as follows:

	Gross tonnage
Fishery Protection Vessels
Norna	1,385
Vigilant	1,250
Sulisker	1,250
Westra	885
Moidart	65
Morven	65
Skua	7
Research Vessels
Scotia	1,521
Clupea	176

The fishery protection vessels are operated by the agency while the research vessels are operated by a private contractor. None of the vessels is on the fishing vessel register.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 12 January to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, Official Report, column 718, what progress he has made towards the recognition of the highlands and islands in the list of objective 1 areas for the allocation of European structural funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The gross domestic product figure for the highlands and islands has been agreed with Eurostat to be 79 per cent. of the Community average, and the Government have made representations to the Commission seeking objective 1 status for the highlands and islands. We expect the Commission's proposals to be published shortly and will be arguing the case strongly in the Council of Ministers when these are considered.

Harbour Closure, Greenock

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect a response to his letter, dated 23 December 1992, about a proposal submitted by Renfrewshire Enterprise for the closure of East India harbour, Greenock.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 23 February 1993]: An acknowledgement was sent to the hon. Member's letter on 21 January 1993. The application from Renfrewshire Enterprise raises complex issues which the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department is considering as quickly as possible. I hope to send the hon. Member a full reply in the near future.

Sheltered Placement Schemes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table itemising how the budget for sheltered placement schemes was expended in Scotland in the financial year 1991-92; what provisions have been made in the financial year 1992-93; how this compares with the previous year in (a) real and (b) per capita terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 January 1993]: Expenditure on the sheltered placement scheme in Scotland for the financial year 1991-92 was as follows:

Local Authority contribution	525,845
Employment Service contribution	1,274,689
Total	1,800,534

Working years on sheltered placement schemes claimed were 411·190, and expenditure per worker was £4,379.

Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available.

Hospital Incinerators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of the hospital incinerators in Scotland that (a) burn less than 25 kg of clinical waste per hour and (b) burn less than 1 tonne of clinical waste per hour.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 February 1993]: The following is a schedule of clinical waste incinerators presently in use within the NHS in Scotland:

Hospitals with incinerators with a capacity of less than 25kG/HR

Dumfries and Galloway Health Board
Thomas Hope Hospital, Langholm
Moffat Hospital
Newton Stewart Hospital

DEFENCE

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Aitken: In the 12 months from 1 February 1992 to 31 January 1993, my Department placed at least 582 contracts which involved some form of consultancy; the exact figure may be a little higher, since contracts placed towards the end of January have not been recorded centrally. The exact figure for 1991-92 was 563.

These figures include various forms of technical consultancy, as well as management consultancy; it is not possible to differentiate them from the figures available.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no record of any contracts having been placed with Chrichton Roberts Ltd. or Leopold Joseph Management Consultants Ltd. The number and value of contracts placed with the other five companies is as follows. Contracts placed in February/March 1992 will, of course, appear in both columns:

	February 1992/ January 1993[1]	1991/1992
Coopers and Lybrand[2]	12 contracts £8,740,330	12 contracts £4,624,622
Touche Ross Management Consultants	11 contracts £1,412,831	13 contracts £802,305
Price Waterhouse[2]	9 contracts £1,136,039	8 contracts £471,122
Ernst and Young Management Consultants	4 contracts £335,300	5 contracts £559,653
KPMG Management Consulting	1 contract[3]	Nil

[1] May be subject to revision, as contracts placed towards the end of January may not yet have been recorded centrally.

[2] Available statistics do not indentify "Management Consultants" separately from other parts of these firms. Consequently some of these contracts may be for services other than management consultancy.

[3] This is the contract mentioned in my answer to the hon. Lady on 25 January 1993 (Official Report, Column 560). As it is our practice to treat values of individual contracts as "Commercial in Confidence", I am not able to reveal the value of this contract.

It is not possible to list the subject of each and every one of these contracts without disproportionate effort.

Land Mines

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had regarding the United States Government's embargo on the export of land mines.

Mr. Aitken: We have had no such discussions.

RAF Chivenor and Brawdy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many military training sorties were flown in each year since 1986 within 120 nautical miles of RAF Chivenor;

(2) how many military training sorties were flown in each year since 1986 within 40 nautical miles of RAF Chivenor;

(3) how many military training sorties were flown in each year since 1986 within 40 nautical miles of RAF Brawdy;

(4) how many military training sorties were flown in each year since 1986 within 120 nautical miles of RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-military incidents search and rescue helicopters based at (i) RAF Brawdy and (ii) RAF Chivenor have responded to in (a) daylight and (b) night-time in each of the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
RAF Brawdy
Day	110	115	121	111	107
Night	31	28	42	44	43
Total	141	143	163	155	150
RAF Chivenor
Day	151	160	140	134	158
Night	18	16	5	5	6
Total	169	176	145	139	164

With effect from 1 October 1989 RAF Chivenor moved from a 24-hour search and rescue service to day time only. The figures shown for night-time against Chivenor in 1990-92 relate to cases where SAR helicopters responded in daylight but returned to base after dark.

Military Flying

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what areas of the United Kingdom are classified as areas of high intensity military flying; and what are the criteria it uses to decide that classification.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to information contained in the Civil Aviation Authority publication "United Kingdom Aeronautical Information Publication", a relevant extract of which I am placing in the House of Commons Library.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department during 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the financial year 1991-92, £4·007 million was spent. As at 31 January 1993, £3·283 million has been spent in financial year 1992-93. This figure includes expenditure incurred by the Ministry of Defence itself, by formations and establishments of the armed forces at home and abroad, and by individual officers occupying command and international appointments for which entertainment allowances are payable.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 575, what was the total bill for redundancy payments paid to the service personnel who left the armed forces on or before 31 December 1992 as a result of "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Expenditure up to 31 December 1992 on special capital payments to personnel who left the services on redundancy terms under "Options for Change" was £83·743 million. In addition, these personnel qualified for immediate terminal grants and pensions/retired pay which would normally have become payable on completion of their engagements/commissions. Up to 31 December 1992 expenditure on terminal grants was £64·647 million and on pensions/retired pay, including lump sum commutation payments, was £46·037 million.

Gulf War

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on whether ships, regiments and squadrons which took part in the Gulf campaign will be able to include the campaign in their battle honours.

Mr. Rifkind: Her Majesty the Queen has graciously approved the award of battle honours to ships, regiments and squadrons of the three services which took part in the campaign to liberate Kuwait.

The award of the battle honour "Kuwait 1991" is to be made to those of Her Majesty's ships, Royal Naval air squadrons and Royal fleet auxiliaries which were either actively engaged in operations against Iraqi forces or engaged in logistic support duties in the central and northern Gulf to the west of the meridian 51E at any time between 17 January and 28 February 1991. The ships and naval air squadrons which qualify are as listed.

The theatre honour "Gulf 1991" and battle honours "Wadi Al Batin" and "Western Iraq" have been approved for the Army. Those Army regiments and the Army air corps which took part in the campaign will be entitled to claim these honours in accordance with normal practice in the Army.

The battle honour "Gulf 1991" has been approved for the Royal Air Force. Squadrons which took part in the campaign will be selected by the Air Force Board to receive this honour.

After claims by regiments and the Army Air Corps have been considered by the Army Board, and Royal Air Force squadrons have been selected by the Air Force Board, recommendations will be submitted to Her Majesty the Queen for approval. I am therefore not able at this stage to list the regiments and squadrons that will be honoured, but these will be reported to the House in due course.

Bosnia

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Mercedes-Benz tractor-trailer units are being used by United Kingdom forces in Bosnia; and what arrangements have been made for their servicing.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 20 January 1993]: Routine servicing is carried out by the REME personnel. Any major repairs necessary would be carried out by the local Mercedes-Benz agent.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will set targets for faster access to hearings at industrial tribunals and to the employment appeal tribunal in England and Wales.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government aim to reduce the current time taken for cases to reach a hearing at the industrial tribunals and the employment appeal tribunal in England and Wales, and to help achieve this have increased the number of judges, chairmen, lay members and administrative staff and have expanded the premises. In addition, the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill provides that chairmen and judges may sit alone in certain cases.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the time taken for an appeal to come to hearing at the employment appeal tribunal in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland; and what assessment has been made of the reason for the difference between the figures.

Mr. McLoughlin: As regards the waiting times, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 February 1993, Official Report, columns 190-91. One reason for the difference in waiting times is the lower workload in Scotland. There are also procedural differences in the handling of notices of appeal. However, additional judges have been appointed to the employment appeal tribunal and I expect this to be reflected in the waiting time in England and Wales.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest white collar unemployment figures for the (a) Leicester, (b) Luton, (c) York, (d) Exeter, (e) Chester, (f) Ashton-under-Lyne, (g) Stanmore and (h) Glasgow travel-to-work areas.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available. Information on unemployment by occupation groups can be obtained from the Labour Force Survey, but only disaggregated to the level of standard regions.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the existing legislation as to the handling of asbestos in its manufacture or removal from buildings was last reviewed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: All work with asbestos is governed by the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987. These were reviewed in 1992, together with their associated approved code of practice—ACoP—when regulations were being prepared to implement a European directive amending the 1983 asbestos worker protection directive. The Health and Safety Commission published a consultative document on the revisions last June. The new asbestos regulations came into force on 1 January 1993, and the revised ACoP will be published in early March.

Work with asbestos insulation and coating, including their removal, is also subject to the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983. These were last formally reviewed in 1986-87, although the Health and Safety Executive monitors their day-to-day effectiveness. Practical guidance on all work with asbestos insulation and coating materials is set out in a second asbestos ACoP which was also reviewed in 1992 and is due to be published in early March. This strongly encourages the adoption of work methods which are designed to limit the amount of dust that can be generated during asbestos removal activities.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many companies have been charged with not providing adequate safety facilities for workers employed by them in the removal of asbestos from buildings in the last five years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Statistics collected by the Health and Safety Executive do not separately identify charges relating specifically to the removal of asbestos from buildings. The following table shows all informations laid and convictions secured by the HSE under the Asbestos Regulations 1969, the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 and the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987. The period covered by the table is for the latest five-year period for which figures are available. Those for 1991-92 are provisional. Details of charges brought by individual local authorities are not collated centrally and so are not readily available, but cases are likely to be rare.

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will estimate the effect on pay of a 1 per cent. change in the level of employment in industries covered by wages councils; and if she will estimate the effect on levels of employment of a 10 per cent. change in the level of pay in wages councils industries.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The relationship between pay and employment is determined by a large number of factors and it is not possible to make precise estimates for individual industries. However, the evidence clearly suggests that, whatever the industry, uneconomic pay increases have a significant and damaging effect on employment.

Mine Safety

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to refrain from granting exemptions from mine safety regulations which allow underground development to advance without roof support beyond 2 m or whose advance extends to distances at which safety cannot be guaranteed or gas cannot be tested with the approved apparatus.

Mr. McLoughlin: Exemptions from certain of the requirements of mining legislation may only be granted by the Health and Safety Executive inspectorate of mines.

An HSE inspector of mines may exempt a mine, or part of a mine, from the requirements of a particular Act or regulation providing that the inspector is satisfied that the safety of persons employed at the mine will not be prejudiced by the granting of the exemption.

Fixed-term Contracts

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has made of the number of employees on fixed-term contracts in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest estimate for the United Kingdom from the spring, March to May, 1992 labour force survey, is that there were 581,000 employees on fixed-term contracts in the United Kingdom.

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount spent by her Department of the budget for training, for England in each year, since 1989-90, the expected outturn in 1992-93 and plans for 1993-94 in 1992-93 prices and cash terms.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the following table. The figures include training programme expenditure and administrative/running costs. The figures are also published in the 1992-93 departmental report.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount spent by her Department of the budget for training, for Great Britain, in each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn in 1992-93 and plans for 1993-94 in 1992-93 prices and cash terms.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases in each of the last four years were processed through the redundancy payments service in situations of enterprise solvency in each region and county and for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of claims processed by the redundancy payments service in Great Britain for the last four complete financial years was:

	Claims
1991-92	305,574
1990-91	189,185
1989-90	110,132
1988-89	100,934

Information on a regional or county basis is not available. Separate arrangements apply in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current average processing time of redundancy payment claims; what was the time in the circumstances of the insolvency of enterprises in each of the last four years; and in how many cases the delay in claim exceeded 12 weeks.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The current average time taken by the redundancy payments service to process claims for redundancy and insolvency payments is six weeks. The comparable figure for 1991-92 was 7·6 weeks.

In the period 1 April 1992 to 31 January 1993, 88·7 per cent. of claims were processed by the redundancy payments service within 12 weeks. In 1991-92, the figure was 79·7 per cent. Information is not available for previous years.

Up to 10 working days is allowed for payment by the Department's finance office after approval of a claim.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give for each of the last four years the cost to the redundancy payments service of meeting payment shortfalls due to the insolvency of enterprises; and how much of this was subsequently recovered.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 provides for various payments out of the national insurance fund when an employer is unable to make them by reason of insolvency. Payments made and sums recovered in the last four years were as follows:

£ million

	1991-92	1990-91	1989-90	1988-89
Payments
To employees, in respect of arrears of pay, holiday pay, compensation for pay in lieu of notice and certain other payments	148·0	75·9	33·1	29·7
To occupational pension schemes in respect of unpaid contributions	2·9	0·9	0·5	0·6
TOTAL PAYMENTS	150·9	76·8	33·6	30·3
Debt recovery
Recovery of debts in insolvency	12·2	7·9	9·0	9·5

Note: Because of the delay between the making of payments and the eventual settlement of claims in the insolvency, the sums recovered do not correspond directly to the year in which payments were made.

Small Firms (Regulations)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all those regulations affecting small firms which have been abolished by her Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 23 February 1993]: I shall arrange for a list of regulations affecting business which have been abolished by the Department to be placed in the Library by early March.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 25 February 1993

EDUCATION

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will make appointments to the regional committees of the Further Education Funding Council for England; and when the committees will begin operating.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend is currently considering appointments to the nine regional committees of the Further Education Funding Council. He hopes to announce the chairmen of the committees by 1 April, with a view to the full establishment of the committees as soon as possible.

Religious Education

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment has been made of the proportion of religious education syllabuses which comply with the requirements of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Forth: The Department has made no such assessment.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the study undertaken by the National Curriculum Council into religious education syllabuses.

Mr. Forth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 22 February 1993, Official Report, column 452.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Jock Kane

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to allow Mr. Jock Kane to publish his two books; and what are the legal costs incurred by the Treasury Solicitor.

Mr. Hurd: I have no plans to apply for the lifting of the High Court injunctions restraining the publication of these books. The books contain information which would cause serious damage to national security and which Mr. Kane obtained in the course of his employment at GCHQ.

The Treasury Solicitor has estimated the legal costs for the 1987 High Court case as £5,870. Figures are not available for 1984, but would not exceed the 1987 figure. Action also taken in 1987 in the Scottish courts, in which legal costs of £839 were incurred.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement of 15 February, Official Report, column 27, whether he will list those articles and protocols which are desirable but not necessary to incorporate into domestic law for the ratification and implementation of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the remarks of my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney General in the Committee stage of the Maastricht Bill on 22 February, Official Report, columns 737-39, and to the written answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) on the same date, Official Report, column 433.

Treaty of Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means the obligations of tiles I, V, VI and VII of the treaty of union are acceded to by an applicant state of the European union, other than by article O of that treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Article O sets out exhaustively the procedure for accession to the treaty on European union, including titles I, V, VI and VII.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to defer the market testing of ED5 in order to clarify the legal position with regard to article 8(4) of the draft EC data protection directive.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what outside legal advice he has received on the effect of article 8(4) of the draft EC data protection directive on the ability of private contractors to hold data concerning criminal convictions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Legal advice is available from the Home Office on this as on other aspects of the draft directive. I have not sought outside legal advice.

Fridges and Freezers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many domestic fridges and freezers his Department intends to purchase in 1993;

(2) what are the latest available annual figures for his Department's purchase of domestic fridges and freezers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not recorded centrally and in the case of the prison service could not be obtained without disproporationate cost. The available information, which may not be complete, for the non-prisons estate is that some 66 fridges/freezers will be purchased in 1993, compared with approximately 51 last year.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department will make it its policy to purchase domestic fridges and freezers that do not contain ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is the Department's policy, subject to ensuring value for money, to reduce the use of ozone-depleting substances by replacing the equipment which contains them except in instances where usage is essential.

Hare Coursing

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now introduce legislation to make hare coursing illegal.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government believe that participation in field sports is a matter for individual conscience. There are no plans for legislation to prohibit or restrict hare coursing.

Weddings

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the law to provide that weddings may be performed in private chapels by ministers of churches other than the Church of England.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

Obscenity and Pornography

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to report to the Prime Minister on the conclusions of the review which he has been asked to undertake of the law relating to obscenity and pornography.

Mr. Jack: As I explained in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 18 February, at column 299, my Department is considering in what ways improvements can be made in the enforcement of the existing legislation relating to obscenity. My right hon. and learned Friend is keeping the Prime Minister informed and will report to him in due course.

Hong Kong (Governor)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Governor of Hong Kong has submitted a further report on the discharge of his functions under the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Governor of Hong Kong submitted a second report to me on 30 December 1992. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Prison Education

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what interim arrangements he is making in respect of each county for prison education between April and August; and what assessment he has made of the effect on the contracts of existing college staff.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 19 February, at column 370. The prison service is not the employer of education staff who work in prisons and the effect on their contracts of employment is a matter for the employers and their employees.

Juvenile Offenders, Cleveland

138. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make an announcement about the provision of secure accommodation for juvenile offenders in Cleveland.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

In consultation with the directors of social services in the north-east of England, including Cleveland, we have identified the need for 11 extra secure beds in the region. I expect a firm decision about the location to be made shortly.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Southern Africa

Mr. Malone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his plans for future management of aid to the southern Africa region.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has announced the Government's intention to set up a new ODA development division in Pretoria, similar to those already operating successfully in other parts of the world. The British development division in Pretoria will help shape and run Britain's increasingly important bilateral aid programme in South Africa, and programmes in Botswana, Lesotho, Namibia and Swaziland. The new development division will be operational this summer. The development division in Lilongwe will continue to manage aid programmes in Malawi, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of British civil servants are promoted internally while on secondment to the EC.

Mr. Robert Jackson: This information is not held centrally. The comparatively short secondments to the EC, or to UKREP, provide valuable developmental experience which Departments are encouraged to take into account when making promotions. Whether promotion on secondment is possible will depend on several factors, including the opportunities for re-absorbing the officer in the new grade on his or her return.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions have been initiated by the Serious Fraud Office; and how many of these have been successful.

The Attorney-General: Since the establishment of the Serious Fraud Office, it has instituted criminal proceedings against 328 defendants.

Of this total, 221 have been tried. Of these 139 were convicted of one or more offences without a successful appeal, 72 were acquitted of all offences and 10 were neither convicted nor acquitted. In the case of eight defendants proceedings were ordered to lie on the file, one defendant died and a nolle prosequi was entered in the remaining case.

Of the remaining defendants, 90 have had proceedings instituted against them but have not yet been tried, seven are abroad and warrants for their arrest have not yet been executed, and 10 did not proceed to trial.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Investment

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the housing investment programme borrowing allocation or basic credit approval for the last 14 years, expressed at constant prices; and what is the basic credit approval announced for 1993-94 on the same price basis.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 25 November 1992, Official Report, column 669, to the Member for Sheffield Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) for information on the housing investment programme—HIP—allocations for the years 1979-80 to 1992-93. The total of the 1993-94 HIP allocation is £1,920 million—£1,869 million in 1992-93 prices.

Housing (Negative Equity)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the total value of negative equity in homes in (a) England and (b) the north-west standard region in April 1992 and at the present date, and of the number of properties involved.

Mr. Baldry: There is insufficient information to estimate the total value of negative equity in mortgaged homes. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 23 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold), Official Report, column 522. The number of dwellings in the north-west region where the mortgage exceeded the value of the dewlling in the fourth quarter of 1992 was probably about 10,000.

Empty Properties

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many empty properties have been purchased under the arrangements announced in the autumn statement; which housing associations have made the purchases and in what areas; and at what total cost.

Mr. Baldry: The latest figures from the Housing Corporation show that by 19 February approvals for the purchase of 16,666 properties had been granted, with 5,755 purchases actually completed.

The assocations making purchases in each of the Corporation's regions were:

London and Home Counties (NE)
Bedfordshire Pilgrims Housing Association, Circle 33 HA, East London HA, Family HA, Guinness Housing Trust, London and Quadrant HT, Newlon HT, Shaftesbury HA, Southern Housing Group, Warden HA;

London and Home Counties (NW)

The total costs incurred by 19 February were:

Source of funds	Approvals (£ million)	Completions (£ million)
Housing Association Grant	534·96	186·46
Other public subsidy	8·21	3·10
Private finance	298·31	107·88
Total costs of schemes	841·48	297·44

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to increase the use of smoke alarms for the deaf.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The Home Office spends over £1 million a year on television advertising to promote the installation and maintenance of smoke alarms in occupied buildings in England and Wales. The television commercials are designed to be readily understood even without the benefit of the soundtrack. We are considering the possibility of providing subtitles on smoke alarm commercials for the 1993-94 advertising campaign.

The Home Office also produces a range of free leaflets on fire safety. These are issued mainly through fire brigades although they are made available to other organisations. One of the leaflets, "Fire safety advice for disabled people", provides information on smoke alarms for deaf people and include addresses from where these may be obtained.

PRIME MINISTER

Featherstone

Q8. Mr. Enright: To ask the Prime Minister when he will visit Featherstone.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister informed the hon. Member on 18 February, he is making plans for a series of visits to all parts of the country and hopes to include Yorkshire among them.

Sherwood

Q9. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit the Sherwood constituency.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is making plans for a series of visits to all parts of the country and hopes to include Nottingham among them.

Ministers' Homes

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give dates and costs of work carried out at public expense at the homes of Ministers of the Crown since 1979.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Information prior to 1991 cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Since April 1991 about £1·5 million has been spent on the installation of protective security measures at the homes of current Ministers. These measures were provided on the advice of those responsible for ministerial security and reflected an assessment of the threat to the individuals concerned. All spending is carefully monitored and controlled by those responsible.

Arms Sales, Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what contribution his office has made to date to the Scott inquiry on arms sales to Iraq.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Lord Justice Scott has asked to see certain papers and these have been made available to him.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 25 February.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 25 February.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is on an official visit to the United States of America.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 327, if he will agree to the request made by Mr. Salman Rushdie for a meeting with him.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has agreed to meet Mr. Rushdie. A date has not yet been decided upon.

HEALTH

Methadone

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individual general practitioners prescribed methadone in the last year.

Dr. Mawhinney: Methadone is listed under three therapeutic categories of drugs within the British National Formulary. The number of general practitioners who prescribed methadone for each therapeutic category in England during 1991 is given in the table.

	Number
Antitussives	2,236
Analgesics	2,293
Used in drug dependence	6,549

Notes

1. The information provided is from Prescribing Analysis and Cost data collected by the Prescription Pricing Authority.

2. The Misuse of Drugs (Notification of Supply of Addicts) Regulations 1973 stipulates a single notification of a suspected addict every twelve months to the Home Office Index of Addicts from each practice. It will therefore not be possible to make a meaningful comparison between the above figures and the number of notifications of drug addicts collected by the Home Office.

Health Authority Costs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the returns made (a) by district health authorities and (b) by district units and trusts on the cost of provision of services; and in what form this information is reported to Parliament.

Dr. Mawhinney: District health authorities, directly managed units and trusts prepare annual financial statements which are audited and made available to the public.

Babies (Identification)

Mr. James Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider a system of fingerprinting or footprinting new born babies to prevent wrong identification of infants.

Mr. Sackville: Advice from the maternity services advisory committee to the national health service is that parents should be able to see the correct details written on their baby's identity bracelets and to confirm that these bracelets are put on their baby. It is essential that all maternity units have in place procedures that ensure that these requirements are met and that bracelets are securely attached to babies in their care. Fingerprinting and footprinting are possible alternatives or additional methods but, before introducing such arrangements, they would need to be thoroughly assessed.

Free Prescriptions

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people during the year 1991-92 (a) qualified for free prescriptions on the grounds of prescribed illnesses or conditions and (b) are estimated to have failed to take up an exemption certificate on this ground during this period.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested. Prescription charge exemption certificates for people with a specified medical condition are valid for a period of five years. In the six months from January to June 1992, the latest period for which figures are held centrally, family health services authorities issued over 40,000 such certificates. The average number issued in each of the three years from 1989 to 1991 was about 75,000. In 1991-92 community pharmacists and appliance contractors dispensed some 24·7 million prescribed items free of charge to people holding these certificates and to expectant or nursing mothers. It is not possible to estimate the number who have failed to take up an exemption certificate.

Medicines Committees

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to change the rules covering information disclosure by members of (a) the Committee on the Safety of Medicines and (b) the Committee on the Review of Medicines respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have no plans, at present, to change the rules covering information disclosure by members of the Committee on the Safety of Medicines. The Committee on the Review of Medicines was disestablished on 1 April 1992.

Prescription Charges

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the numbers of disability working allowance claimants to date who are also in receipt of exemption from prescription charges, by reason of (a) low income and (b) prescribed illness or condition;

(2) what is her estimate of numbers and types of persons who fail to claim exemption from prescription charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available; nor is it possible to make such an estimate. About 80 per cent. of all prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors are free of charge; a further 5 per cent. go to holders of prescription prepayment certificates.

Pharmacists

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue a report on the provisions made by her Department to recompense pharmacists for purchasing and maintaining adequate stocks of expensive medicines when on-cost is abolished in April.

Dr. Mawhinney: Discussions are taking place with the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee about this issue.

Prescription Forms

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her Department has carried out a detailed costing for the introduction of a triple prescription form of the kind proposed by the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee.

Dr. Mawhinney: No detailed costing has been carried out as yet, but the issue of triple prescription forms is still under consideration.

Drugs Selected List

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the input, by experts and groups relating to the study of dermatology, in the advisory committee on NHS drugs on the proposed changes and addition of new categories to the NHS selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: A consultant dermatologist, Dr. Grattan, has been appointed to the advisory committee on national health service drugs. It is open to the committee to seek any further expert advice it considers necessary for its work.

Trainee Nurses

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the health service careers department last advertised for trainee nurses in Birmingham; and how many of the last intake to qualify have obtained jobs within the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: There is no health service careers department. The last advertising campaign run by the Department of Health was in 1991-92. Details of local recruitment campaigns and jobs for qualifiers are not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Donald Wilson, chairman of West Midlands regional health authority for details.

Benzodiazepine

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions were issued for each benzodiazepine by community pharmacists in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland in 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department holds figures only for England. The information is in the table:

	Number
Temazepam	6,039
Diazepam	3,063
Nitrazepam	3,000
Lorazepam	1,080
Triazolam	1,076
Chlordiazepoxide	504
Oxazepam	360
Loprazolam	180
Lormetazepam	171
Clonazepam	128
Clobazam	61
TOTAL	15,662

Note: The data for 1991 are not directly comparable to those for earlier years because of a change in the way in which these data are collected. From January 1991, the data are based on items. Previously they were based on prescription fees and some items may attract more than one fee.

Information relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Pregnancy Terminations

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to health authorities and trusts about the level of appropriate post natal follow-up, following termination of pregnancy for foetal abnormality.

Mr. Sackville: In April 1991 the Department issued copies of the Stillbirth and Neonatal Death Society's "Guidelines for Professionals" to relevant points in the national health service. These guidelines are as relevant to the loss of a baby resulting from termination in pregnancy for foetal abnormality as they are for miscarriage and stillbirth.

Vitamin K

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what developments are taking place leading to the licensing of oral vitamin K.

Mr. Sackville: Discussions have been held between the Medicines Control Agency and representatives of the pharmaceutical industry with regard to appropriate data requirements of safety, efficacy and quality for the granting of a product licence for an oral preparation of vitamin K.

Stepping Hill Psychiatric Units

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to ensure that the comments of the Mental Health Commissioner relating to staffing in psychiatric units at Stepping Hill contained in its letter dated 9 September 1992 are being acted upon.

Mr. Yeo: An internal review panel was set up by Stockport health authority to look into aspects of psychiatric services, including staffing, at Stepping Hill hospital. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Milnes, chief executive of Stockport health authority, for further information.

Respiratory Disease

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will fund research into the effects of sulphur dioxide and related pollutants on lung function in asthmatics and others with respiratory disease and the effects of such pollutants on the incidence of respiratory disease and asthma attacks; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The advisory group of medical aspects of air pollution episodes set up in 1990 by the Government's chief medical officer has prepared two reports on air pollutants. That on ozone was published in 1991 and that on sulphur dioxide in 1992. Copies are in the Library.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council—MRC—which receives its grant in aid from the Office of Science and Technology. The MRC is currently sponsoring some research into factors contributing to the rise of asthma cases and has set up a working party to examine the aetiology of asthma under the chairmanship of Professor A. J. Norman Taylor. This working party is currently considering a range of possible contributory factors to current levels of asthma including air pollution.

Health Authorities, Yorkshire

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the total FHSA budget for each such authority in the Yorkshire region for 1992-93;

(2) what is the total purchasing budget for each health authority in the Yorkshire region for 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The information held centrally is for regional health authorities only. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority, for this information.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total budget for fund-holding practices for each health authority area in the Yorkshire region for 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Yorkshire regional health authority is responsible for the management of the general practitioner fundholding scheme in these areas. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, the regional health authority chairman, for details.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were registered at (a) fund-holding and (b) non-fund-holding practices for each health authority area in the Yorkshire region as at 31 December 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority, for details.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for (a) each regional health authority and (b) England as a whole the number of hospital beds by specialty, on the basis of average daily available beds, for each year from 1979-80 to 1991-92; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The available information has been published and copies of the national and regional summaries placed in the Library. The data for 1979 to 1986 are contained in the publication "Hospital Statistics—Form SH3", which records bed availability at individual specialty level. The data for 1987-88 to 1990-91 are contained in the "Summary of Bed Availability—Form KHO3", which implemented the recommendations of the Korner review of health service information. These data are classified by broad ward category, recognising the more flexible use of bed facilities. The summaries for 1991-92 are to be published shortly and copies will be placed in the Library.

Pamphlets

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pamphlets the national health service management executive published from January 1990 to January 1991 and from January 1991 to January 1992; if she will list the title, the recipients and the cost; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: During the period April 1990 to December 1991, the national health service management executive issued 78 pamphlets, leaflets and brochures. The tables give the description, cost and recipient.

Information for the period January to March 1990 is not available.

Hospitals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given the Alexandra hospital in Redditch concerning its bid for trust status; what guidance she has given North Worcestershire health authority concerning the planned closure of the Highfield hospital in Droitwich; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Blood Tests

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce compulsory blood tests on a regular basis for all national health service employees; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I have no current plans to introduce regular compulsory blood tests for all national health service staff.

Disciplinary Appeals

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she takes to ensure that she is in possession of all relevant information when hearing an appeal by a doctor against a penalty imposed by a tribunal hearing a disciplinary action.

Dr. Mawhinney: The procedures for dealing with appeals against family health services authority decisions on complaints against general practitioners are set out in the National Health Service (Service Committee and Tribunal) Regulations. Copies of the regulations are available in the Library.

In determining an appeal, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will inquire into the whole of the complaint, and take into account any evidence that was available to the committee which heard the complaint and of any further information, if any, that has been presented on appeal. Where appropriate, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may appoint persons to hold an oral hearing of the appeal and to report their findings, and may also seek advice from the Medical Advisory Committee as to whether a penalty should be imposed.

Lung Cancer

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Healthr what is her estimate of the number of people who have died in sed.each of the last three years from lung cancer as a result of handling asbestos; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

Since April 1985, lung cancer has been a prescribed disease under the industrial injuries scheme provided the sufferer has had occupational exposure to asbestos and has some other clinical sign of asbestos-related disease. The numbers of cases diagnosed under this scheme in the last three years for which figures are available are:

Asbestos-related Lung Cancer

Year	Number
1989	54
1990	58
1991	55

These figures were published in the Employment Gazette occasional supplement No. 3, September 1992.

However, the lung cancer deaths attributable to asbestos are known to be considerably understated, mainly because many cases may not be recognised as asbestos-related by the sufferers or their doctors.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Leader Programme

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the schemes now approved under the Leader programme; and what is the estimated funding in each scheme.

Mr. Hanley: Schemes now approved under the EC Leader programme in Northern Ireland are as follows:

Mid Ulster Enterprises (Creggan) Ltd., Omagh, Co. Tyrone—£388,320;
The Seeconnell Initiative, Castlewellan, Co. Down—£508,200;
South West Fermanagh Development Organisation Ltd.—£52,000.

Terrorism

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the terrorist incidents in 1992 in which shots were fired over the international frontier, bombs or command wires crossed the frontier, the terrorists came over or escaped over the frontier or that otherwise had a cross-frontier element.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 12 February 1993]: It would not be appropriate to disclose detailed information held by the Royal Ulster Constabulary about incidents in which charges may be brought.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Family Courts (Creches)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy for family courts to provide creche facilities.

Mr. John M. Taylor: All family court care centres have a separate child witness waiting room and, in addition, as a result of local initiatives, family rooms where children can wait have been created at a number of other courts. At the magistrates courts, creche facilities may be provided on a local basis if it is considered desirable by the relevant magistrates courts committee. This is the most practical policy in the circumstances.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many personnel who served with the Royal Navy during the second world war are in receipt of pensions awarded further to submitting claims for asbestos-related diseases.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Resettlement Agency

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Resettlement Agency's plan to dispose of its resettlement units to voluntary organisations or local authorities.

Miss Widdecombe: The Resettlement Agency is, today, beginning a tender exercise to dispose of its resettlement units at West End house, Spur house and Pound lodge each of which is in London, and also its resettlement units at Leicester and at Lye in the west midlands. The exercise to dispose of these five units will be completed by the end of March 1994.

National Insurance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who pay national insurance contributions are not liable to income tax.

Miss Widdecombe: Based on information from the annual new earnings survey and estimates of the number of employees in employment, it is estimated that there are currently some 0·5 million contributors whose earnings fall below the PAYE threshold for the payment of income tax.

Marginal Tax Rates

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people faced marginal tax rates (a) including and (b) excluding social security of over (i) 40 per cent., (ii) 50 per cent., (iii) 60 per cent., (iv) 70 per cent., (v) 80 per cent., (vi) 90 per cent. and (vii) 100 per cent. in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Burt: Such information as is available is in the tables.

Notes:

1. Figures for 1985-86 to 1991-92 are for benefit units where at least one partner works 24 hours or more.

2. Figures for 1992-93 are based on benefit units where at least one partner works 16 hours or more. These people would have experienced 100 per cent. deduction rate whilst on Income Support so their circumstances as a result of the change to Family Credit, will have improved.

3. Information for the years 1978-79, 1984-85, 1986-87 and 1987-88 is not available.

Benefits

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for each change in the minimum lending rate since April 1992, the interest earned on £5,000 invested at minimum lending rates and the income assumed to be received by a benefit claimant with £5,000 capital for both housing benefit and poll tax benefit calculations.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table. This reflects changes in the base rate rather than the minimum lending rate—the two are often used as broad synonyms but the latter has only been used intermittently since 1981. The formula for calculating benefit deductions is not intended to represent any rate of return that could be obtained from investing capital.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Typing Pool Services

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans have been proposed regarding tendering of typing pool services in VAT and Inland Revenue offices in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise have included typing pool services in VAT as part of the programme of market testing activities in their regional executive units in England and Wales.

The Inland Revenue proposes to market test typing services within the boundaries of its south-west regional executive office.

Consultants

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Nelson: The record of contracts awarded by the Treasury to the companies mentioned in the question is as follows:

Company
Coopers Lybrand
1991-92	1 Management Consultancy
1992-93	1 Audit Consultancy
	Total Value £153,000
Touche Ross
1991-92	1 Market Testing Consultancy
1992-93	1 Management Consultancy
	Total Value £87,000
Price Waterhouse
1991-92	3 Management Consultancies
1992-93	1 Management Consultancy
	Total Value £108,000

	Total Value £219,000
KPMG
1991-92	1 Management Consultancy
1992-93	1 Management Consultancy
	1 Training Consultancy
	Total Value £88,000

Chrichton Roberts Ltd and Leopald Joseph management consultants have not been awarded any contracts during the 1991-92 or 1992-93 financial years.

Because of the need to maintain commercially sensitive information, we have only shown the combined total value of contracts for each company for the two years in question.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the instances, by Government Department, when the National Audit Office, in reports published since November 1990, has identified cost overruns resulting from departmental inefficiencies.

Mr. Dorrell: Since November 1990, seven NAO reports on Government Departments have identified cost overruns. These reports are listed in the table, along with the reasons for the overruns.

Cost overruns identified in NAO reports since November 1990

Department	NAO Report	Publication Date	HC Ref	Reason for Cost Overrun

Family Incomes

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) of 11 January, Official Report, column 546, if he will give similar information for an increase in the reduced rate band of income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: At 1993-94 levels of income and assuming indexation of allowances and thresholds, the full year cost of a 1p cut in the basic rate of tax is about £1·5 billion. This is equivalent to the cost of increasing the lower rate band width to £3,700. Under such a regime, a married man paying tax at least at the basic rate would be £1·54 per week better off when compared with indexation.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families with children are estimated to have taxable income below the income tax threshold; and what proportion this represents of all families with children.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1992-93 it is estimated that 1·6 million single parents and married couples with children have no income tax liability. These represent just over a fifth of all families with children.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the saving if mortgage interest tax relief was limited to 25 per cent. of base rates.

Mr. Dorrell: The revenue yield from calculating mortgage interest relief in terms of 25 per cent. of interest charged at base rates rather than actual mortgage interest rates would be about £700 million at 1992-93 levels.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the increase in cost to the Treasury, in terms of mortgage interest tax relief, of each percentage increase in interest rates.

Mr. Dorrell: About £500 million at 1992-93 levels.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on revenues in 1993-94, and in a full year, of (a) increasing and (b) decreasing the limit for mortgage tax relief by (i) £1,000, (ii) £2,000 (iii) £5,000 and (iv) £10,000.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated costs at 1992-93 levels of increasing or decreasing the limit for mortgage interest tax relief are shown in the table. The estimates are based on the distribution of existing mortgages and therefore exclude behavioural effects which might result.

The costs for 1993-94 will depend on the pattern of borrowing, the eligibility of borrowers for mortgage interest tax relief, tax rates and interest rates.

Limit on size of loan £	Cost (yield) of from increasing (decreasing) the ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief at 1992-93 levels £ million

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will provide a table showing the number of recipients of higher-rate mortgage interest tax relief for each year since 1979-80 in the United Kingdom by region;

(2) if he will provide a table showing the number of recipients of mortgage interest tax relief for each year since 1979-80 in the United Kingdom by region;

(3) what was the total value of providing higher-rate mortgage interest tax relief for each year since 1979-80 in the United Kingdom by region (a) at current prices and (b) at 1979-80 prices;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 17 June 1992, Official Report, columns 537-38, to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh), if he will (a) update the table with the latest information he has available on mortgage interest tax relief and (b) provide the information at both 1979-80 prices and cash prices.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 February 1993]: Information for the total of mortgage interest relief is in the tables. The regional distributions for 1979-80 to 1982-83 have been derived from the relevant surveys of personal incomes. However, following the introduction of mortgage interest relief at source—MIRAS—in April 1983, regional information cannot be extracted from Inland Revenue records. Broad estimates for the years 1983-84 to 1991-92 have accordingly been based on analyses of the family expenditure surveys for the years concerned.

Reliable estimates of the value of and the number of recipients of higher rate mortgage interest tax relief by region are not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

[1] Excludes option mortgage scheme (1979-80 to 1983-84).
[2] Provisional.
[3] Higher rate relief was abolished in 1991-92.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the most recent figures for the number of non-taxpayers who are claiming mortgage interest relief at source, in the United Kingdom; and how much this is costing the Exchequer.

Mr. Dorrell: MIRAS is available on all qualifying mortgages regardless of the tax status of the mortgagor. A tentative estimate, based on the 1991 family expenditure survey, is that there are about 1 million non-taxpayers receiving mortgage interest relief at source in 1992-93 at a cost of some £360 million.

Income Tax

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers pay income tax at the rate of 20 per cent. only; and what is their average (a) gross and (b) taxable income.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates for 1992-93 indicate that about 4·4 million taxpayers pay income tax only at the lower rate of 20 per cent. Their average gross income is £5,400 and their average taxable income is £930.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue yield from non-indexation of the basic rate limit for income tax in 1993-94 and in a full year; and what would be the increase in the lower rate band which could be financed by this amount.

Mr. Dorrell: Compared with 2·6 per cent. indexation, the yield would be about £110 million in 1993-94, £180 million in a full year. For an equivalent cost in a full year the lower rate band could be increased by about £200.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has from local tax offices of employers not operating PAYE systems properly and failing to take into account the lower rate band of income tax when calculating tax deductions; and what has been done to rectify this situation.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue became aware during the first half of the 1992-93 financial year that not all employers were taking the lower rate band into account in operating PAYE. In October 1992, local tax offices were advised on how to help these employers apply the tax tables correctly. These efforts have been reinforced by national press coverage of the topic in December 1992 following a local tax office initiative.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue yield in 1993-94 and in a full year of (a) raising the rate of VAT by 1 per cent. and (b) extending VAT to (i) children's clothing and footwear, (ii) food, (iii) domestic fuel, (iv) fares, (v) domestic construction, (vi) books, (vii) newspapers, (viii) other zero-rated supplies and (ix) all zero-rated supplies.

Sir John Cope: Table 5·8 in the 1992 "Autumn Statement" shows an estimate that a one percentage point increase in the rate of VAT would produce a yield of £1,675 million in 1993-94 and £2,350 million in the full year of 1994-95. The statistical supplement to the 1992 "Autumn Statement" shows the estimated cost in 1992-93 in terms of forgone revenue from zero-rating various goods and services.

The figures are as follows:—

	£ million
Children's clothing and footwear	600
Food	7,000
Domestic fuel	2,600
Domestic passenger transport	1,100
International passenger transport	800
Domestic construction	1,800
Books, newspapers, magazines	1,100
Water and sewerage services	700
Drugs and medicines on prescription	500
Supplies to charities	200
Ships and aircraft above a certain size	500

These figures make no allowance for the likely behavioural response to applying the standard rate of VAT to these items so the actual yield would probably be less than these figures suggest.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimates have been made of the impact of (i) 5 per cent. and (ii) 17½ per cent. VAT on air travel on (a) fare levels, (b) the number of passenger journeys, (c) the transfer of traffic to private road vehicles and (d) road congestion;

(2) what estimates have been made of the effect of 5 per cent. and 17½ per cent. VAT on road passenger transport on (a) fare levels, (b) concessionary fare levels, (c) the number of passenger journeys, (d) the transfer of traffic to private road vehicles and (e) increased road congestion;

(3) what estimates have been made of the effect of 5 per cent. and 17½ per cent. VAT on rail travel on (a) fare levels, (b) concessionary fare levels, (c) the number of passenger journeys, (d) the amount of freight transported, (e) the transfer of traffic to private road vehicles and (f) increased road congestion.

Sir John Cope: A positive rate of VAT on public passenger transport would lead to higher fares and some reduction in traffic and some diversion to private road vehicles. All of these impacts would, however, depend in particular upon the individual degree of competition on routes, and numerical estimates are not available. Freight traffic already bears VAT.

Child Care

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on revenues in 1993-94 and in a full year of extending the income tax exemption for workplace nurseries as a benefit in kind to (a) child care cheques and vouchers and (b) other employer-assistance with child care; and what the effects would be if relief were limited to the basic rate.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is given in my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 20 January 1993, at column 260. The effect at 1992-93 levels of limiting the relief to the basic rate would be minimal.

Taxpayers

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number and percentage of adults who pay income tax broken down by (a) sex, (b) marital status and (c) whether they are over or under pension age, giving for each group the numbers whose highest marginal tax rate is (i) 40 per cent., (ii) 25 per cent. and (iii) 20 per cent.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates of taxpayer numbers in 1992-93 based on a projection of the 1990-91 survey of personal incomes are shown in the table. Available estimates are in terms of age below or above 65 rather than pension age.

All taxpayers	5,200	480	8,200	1,000	3,600	900	5,000	550	24,800

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost in 1993-94 and in a full year of increasing the lower rate band by (a) £100, (b) £500, and (c) £1,000; and how many additional taxpayers would face a top marginal rate of income tax of 20 per cent. as a result, giving figures separately for men and women.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimated costs compared with 2·6 per cent. indexation of the 1992-93 allowances and thresholds, are in the table.

Increase in the lower rate band	Revenue cost in 1993-94	Revenue cost in a full year	Additional numbers of taxpayers with a marginal rate of 20 per cent.
			Males	Females
£	£ million	£ million	(000s)	(000s)
100	80	100	110	90
500	390	490	440	470
1,000	760	960	950	860

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the tax liabilities of taxpayers in 1992-93 in the income ranges (a) including and (b) excluding the effects of changes in national insurance contributions (i) under £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000, (iii) £10,000 to £15,000, (iv) £15,000 to £20,000, (v) £20,000 to £25,000, (vi) £25,000 to £30,000, (vii) £30,000 to £40,000, (viii) £40,000 to £50,000, (ix) £50,000 to £70,000, (x) over £70,000 and (xi) over £100,000, compared with what their liability would be under the indexed 1987-88 income tax regime.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates of the average reductions in income tax liability resulting from the changes in tax rates, allowances and thresholds are in the table. The 1987-88 income tax regime has been indexed to 1992-93 levels by reference to the statutory formula and allowing for independent taxation.

Range of individuals income in 1992-93 (£)	Average change in 1992-93 compared with 1987-88 indexed regime (£)
	Income tax	Income tax and National Insurance
Under 5,000	80	90
5,000-10,000	190	250
10,000-15,000	260	400
15,000-20,000	340	490
20,000-25,000	430	570
25,000-30,000	510	630
30,000-40,000	370	480
40,000-50,000	730	840
50,000-70,000	2,150	2,240
70,000-80,000	4,840	4,920
Over 80,000	18,900	18,900
Average	400	480

I regret that a reliable analysis of taxpayers with incomes over £100,000 is not available.

For the purpose of the calculations the indexed regime of 1987-88 has been applied directly to the income base of 1992-93. In practice, retention of the 1987-88 regime, indexed as appropriate, for the intervening years would have led to changes in the income base.

Tax Exempt Special Savings Accounts

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has of the effect of the introduction of TESSAs on savings.

Mr. Dorrell: Nearly 3·5 million people have invested more than £12 billion in TESSAs. TESSA has quickly become established as an important way of encouraging medium-term savings.

Tax Exemption

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people in the income groups of individual's income (a) below £5,000, (b) from £5,000 to £10,000, (c) from £10,000 to £15,000, (d) from 15,000 to £20,000, (e) from £20,000 to £25,000, (f) from £25,000 to £30,000, (g) from £30,000 to £40,000, (h) from £40,000 to £50,000, (i) from £50,000 to £60,000, (j) from £60,000 to £70,000 and (k) over £70,000, received tax relief on profit-related pay schemes in the latest year for which figures are available; what proportion this represents of the total number of people in each income group; and what was the average tax relief of people with profit-related pay within each income group;

(2) how many people in the income groups of individual's income (a) below £5,000, (b) from £5,000 to £10,000, (c) from £10,000 to £15,000, (d) from 15,000 to £20,000, (e) from £20,000 to £25,000, (f) from £25,000 to £30,000, (g) from £30,000 to £40,000, (h) from £40,000 to £50,000, (i) from £50,000 to £60,000, (j) from £60,000 to £70,000 and (k) over £70,000, benefited from inheritance tax exemption in the latest year for which figures are available; what proportion this represents of the total number of people in each income group; what was the average exemption within each income group; and what was the cost to the Treasury of inheritance tax exemption in each income group;

(3) how many people in the income groups of individual's income (a) below £5,000, (b) from £5,000 to £10,000, (c) from £10,000 to £15,000, (d) from 15,000 to £20,000, (e) from £20,000 to £25,000, (f) from £25,000 to £30,000, (g) from £30,000 to £40,000, (h) from £40,000 to £50,000, (i) from £50,000 to £60,000, (j) from £60,000 to £70,000 and (k) over £70,000, took out personal equity plans in the latest year for which figures are available;

what proportion this represents of the total number of people in each income group; and what was the average tax relief on PEPs, within each income group;

(4) how many people in the income groups of individual's income (a) below £5,000, (b) from £5,000 to £10,000, (c) from £10,000 to £15,000, (d) from 15,000 to £20,000, (e) from £20,000 to £25,000, (f) from £25,000 to £30,000, (g) from £30,000 to £40,000, (h) from £40,000 to £50,000, (i) from £50,000 to £60,000, (j) from £60,000 to £70,000 and (k) over £70,000, benefited from capital gains tax exemption in the latest year for which figures are available; what proportion this represents of the total number of people in each income group; what was the average exemption within each income group; and what was the cost to the Treasury of capital gains tax exemption in each income group.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Retail Prices Index

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the impact on 1992-93 on the retail prices index of raising £1 billion from (a) tobacco products, (b) beer, (c) wine and spirits, (d) petrol, (e) VAT and (f) vehicle excise duty.

Sir John Cope: The necessary changes in the rate of duty or VAT have been calculated on the basis of figures published in table 5.8 of the 1992 "Autumn Statement." The estimated impact effects are as follows, assuming the full tax increases are passed on to consumers in the form of higher prices:

	Per cent. change in duty	RPI impact effect per cent.
Tobacco	18·9	0·45
Beer	49·3	0·40
Wine and Spirits	73·2	0·93
Petrol	11·4	0·23
VED	31·0	0·26
VAT, percentage point increase	0·6	0·27

Some of the additional tax burden may fall on businesses, in particular any increase in petrol duty. If businesses pass this cost on to consumers in the form of higher prices, the long run effect on the RPI may be greater than indicated.

Tobacco

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total income in the form of duties or tax received by the Exchequer from the sale of tobacco and tobacco products during each year since 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The following is the available information:—

	Tobacco Duty Receipts £ million	Estimates of VAT on Tobacco Expenditure £ million
1989-90	5,035	1,070
1990-91	5,636	1,160
1991-92	6,290	1,490

Taxes and Excise Duties

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the information given in tables 5·2, 5·3, 5·4, 5·5, 5·6, 5·7 and 5·8 of the autumn statement 1992 on the basis of the December retail prices index.

Mr. Dorrell: Updated figures for 1993-94 on the basis of an indexation factor of 2·6 per cent. are given in the tables. Tables 5·6 and 5·8 showing illustrative changes in taxes are unaffected by the change in the indexation factor. A correction to the figures published in table 5·6 of the "Autumn Statement" was given in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 16 February 1993, Official Report, column 122.

Table 5—Income Tax

	1992-93 £	1993-94 £
Personal allowance	3,445	3,535
Personal allowance (age 65 to 74)	4,200	4,310
Personal allowance (age 75 and over)	4,370	4,490
Married couple's allowance	1,720	1,770
Married couple's allowance (age 65 to 74)	2,465	2,535
Married couple's allowance (age 75 and over)	2,505	2,575
Additional personal[1] and widow's bereavement allowance	1,720	1,770
Aged income limit[2]	14,200	14,600
Lower rate band	2,000	2,100
Basic rate limit[3]	23,700	24,400

[1] Primarily for single parents.

[2] If the total income, less allowable deductions, of a taxpayer aged 65 or over exceeds this limit, the age-related allowances are reduced by £1 for each additional £2 of income until the basic levels of the personal and married couple's allowances are reached.

[3] Higher rate income tax is payable on income (less allowances and those reliefs which are allowed at the higher rate) in excess of the basic rate limit.

[1] These are estimated on the assumption that total consumers' expenditure at factor cost does not change.

[2] Assuming implementation on 1 April 1993.

[3] The price change is assumed to equal the change in duty plus the consequential change in VAT except in the case of VED where VAT is not payable. The price change is for the typical item described above the rounded to the nearest one-tenth of a pence.

[4] Includes receipts from tax on items not listed below.

[5] Impact effect on the RPI.

[6] The duty on cigarettes has ad valorem and specific elements; revalorisation and the illustrative percentage change relate only to the specific element, but the price change includes the consequential increase in ad valorem duty and VAT.

[7] All VED, including HGVs as well as cars and light vans.

TRANSPORT

Rail Investment

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the annual investment in the existing railway including track renewals, for each year since 1963, and the equivalent figure proposed by his Department for 1993-94.

Mr. Freeman: Figures for expenditure on track renewals are not readily available prior to 1979. Figures for investment in the existing railway including track renewals and rolling stock after 1979 are in the following table. BR's initial estimate for investment in the existing railway in 1993-94 is around £550 million. The latest forecast of the outturn for 1992-93 is £1,058 million. A further £150 million has been provided for future rolling stock leases.

	£ million cash
1979	367
1980	431
1981	409
1982	378
1983	439
1984-85	557
1985-86	550
1986-87	530
1987-88	631
1988-89	695
1989-90	864
1990-91	836
1991-92	1,032

Notes:

1. Figures exclude changes in advance payments on rolling stock orders.
2. Figures for 1979 and 1980 exclude ships, harbours, hovercraft and hotels.

Rail Privatisation

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the regulator will have powers to require private rail operators, following the privatisation of British Rail, to provide common discount facilities for pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Yes, if he considers it requisite or expedient having regard to his general duties under clause 4 of the Railways Bill. But private operators will be under strong commercial incentives to offer discount facilities to attract customers.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the pension arrangements for employees of South Yorkshire Transport if the sale to the private sector takes place after 30 June.

Mr. Freeman: I have had no recent communications from the South Yorkshire passenger transport authority, but I hope that it will sell South Yorkshire Transport Ltd. before 30 June.

MV Braer

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further progress has been made with regard to interim measures following the MV Braer incident.

Mr. MacGregor: A paper was submitted to the Secretary General of the International Maritime Organisation yesterday for consideration at the maritime safety committee meeting in May. The paper contained details of a number of interim measures to protect the United Kingdom coast from accidental pollution. The measures include a voluntary code for laden tankers that the industry has undertaken to develop by mid-March. The code will stress the importance of:

- Passage Planning
- Compliance with internationally agreed routeing schemes
- Voluntary reporting arrangements in specified areas
- Advising coastal states if a vessel is experiencing difficulties which could lead to pollution
- The maintenance of appropriate margins of safety in case of ship breakdown
- Testing essential systems
- Satisfactory towing arrangements on tankers
- The right of masters to exercise their discretion in particular circumstances

The paper also sets out routeing measures that are under active consideration. These measures include:

- An extended area to be avoided around the Shetland Islands
- A Traffic Separation Scheme in the Fair Isle Channel and recommendations on tanker navigation in the following locations:

- Pentland Firth
- Minch
- North Channel
- Off Smalls and Grassholme Island
- Off Scilly Islands
- Needles Channel
- Firth of Forth

We will ensure that all those affected by these measures will be fully consulted before the maritime safety committee meets in May. Copies of the paper are in the Libraries of both Houses.

Shipping

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the size in tonnes of the maritime fleet owned and registered in the United Kingdom in 1979 and that for the latest period for which figures are available; what information he has about the corresponding trend in other major European fleets over the same period; and what recent discussions have taken place with the European Commission and in the Council of Ministers regarding likely future developments, including the subject of aid to fleets.

Mr. Norris: The total deadweight tonnage of the trading fleet owned and registered in the United Kingdom fell from 39.3 million tonnes at mid-1979 to 5·6 million tonnes at the end of 1992.

The deadweight tonnage on the principal mainland European registries, irrespective of ownership, at mid-1979 and at the end of 1992 were as follows:

Deadweight

(million tonnes)

	Mid-1979	End-1992
United Kingdom[1]	44·3	6·4
Denmark	8·9	6·8
France	20·6	5·6
Germany[2]	13·5	6·3
Greece	63·3	46·8
Italy	19·0	10·1
Netherlands	8·2	4·6
Spain	13·6	4·0
Cyprus	3·4	36·7
Malta	0·1	18·5
Norway	39·1	37·7
Poland	4·8	4·1
Romania	2·5	4·2
Sweden	7·4	3·4
Yugoslavia	3·6	n/a

[1] Includes the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man and tonnage owned by non UK residents.

[2] The end-1992 figure for Germany includes the fleet of the former German Democratic Republic.

On future developments, the December Transport Council endorsed our presidency paper on positive measures to improve the competitiveness of Community fleets, which have all reduced in size. Particular points stressed were that there should be flexibility on manning requirements and that the Commission should bring forward proposals for a number of non-financial measures, including the enforcement of maritime safety standards to avoid Community shipowners being at a competitive disadvantage with sub-standard shipping from third countries.

During our presidency, we argued strongly for the curbing of state aids in discussion with the Commission and in the Council of Ministers, and the Commission's recent White Paper, "The Future Development of the Common Transport Policy", confirmed that state aids should not be permitted to distort competition and compromise the establishment of a level playing field. We shall continue to press for the adoption of measures to even out the terms of competition within the Community.

Kent Coast Line

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assurances he has been given that an order for new rolling stock to serve the Kent coast line, based upon existing available funding and the Networker design, would be commercially viable; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with British Rail concerning its failure to place an order for new Networker trains to serve the Kent coast line.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend and I have asked British Rail to tell me by Easter what rolling stock it wishes to lease using the £150 million leasing facility announced at the time of the autumn statement, and for which routes. New Networker rolling stock for Kent coast is one of the options. We expect BR to inform us of the commercial implications of its chosen option.

Driving Licences

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if applications for driving licences for people age 70 years or over are divulged to commercial organisations.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No personal information about applicants of any age is given to commercial organisations.

Greater Manchester Buses Ltd.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport following his direction under section 61 of the Transport Act 1985 to Greater Manchester Buses Ltd., what assessment he has made of whether the EC acquired rights directive will apply, upon disposal, in respect of pension rights.

Mr. Freeman: Pension rights are being fully discussed between my Department, the Department of the Environment and the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what protection of employees' pension rights he intends to introduce on the disposal of Greater Manchester Buses Ltd. following his direction under section 61 of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Freeman: I am having constructive talks with the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority.

Twyford Down (Private Detectives)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance was issued by his Department to Bray's Detective Agency (Southampton) Ltd. in relation to their investigation of protesters at Twyford Down, Hampshire; what monitoring of the activities of the firm was carried out by his Department to ensure such guidance was adhered to; and if he will place a copy of such guidance in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Bray's Detective Agency (Southampton) Ltd. was appointed to serve papers on people who have trespassed on departmental land and to photograph trespassers. It was not considered necessary to issue guidance for the execution of these tasks.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations took place between his Department and its contractors on the Twyford Down project over the hiring of a private security firm and over the deployment of this firm on 9 December 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Site security is the responsibility of the contractor. In this case, the contractors consulted the Department before employing an experienced security firm to protect the site from intrusion by trespassers.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to reply to the letter sent to him on 21 January by the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen, regarding the use of private detective agencies and private security guards at Twyford Down, Hampshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Soon.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines have been established by his Department (a) for the use of private security firms on his Department's land and (b) for use when considering whether to employ private detectives; and if he will place a copy of the guidelines in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 22 February 1993]: Private security firms and detectives are used infrequently. No guidelines have been established.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the total sum of moneys paid to Bray's Detective Agency (Southampton) Ltd. by his Department since February 1992; and if he will place a copy of its contract of employment in the Library;

(2) what was the method of appointment used in the selection of Bray's Detective Agency (Southampton) Ltd.; and what criteria were used in the selection.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 22 February 1993]: The agency was appointed on the recommendation of the engineer. No formal contract was made. To date, the agency has been paid approximately £7,000.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations underlay his decisions to forbid Group 4 Security Ltd. from making a statement to the television programme "Dispatches" in relation to its employment by his Department at Twyford Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I took the view that as overall responsibility for the M3 scheme rests with my right hon. Friend, I should issue a single statement to the makers of the "Dispatches" television programme about the action taken to progress this scheme.

Submarine Monitoring Scheme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the policy of HM Coastguard in respect of the current operation of the subfacts scheme.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 23 February 1993]: HM coastguard supports the agreement between the Ministry of Defence and the fishing industry that information on the areas where dived submarines are active should be provided for the benefit of fishermen.

Recent discussions have been held with Ministry of Defence officials to consider the options available for transmitting subfacts information. Proposals are awaited from the MOD as to the best way forward.

Vehicle Testing Centres

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be reporting on the results of his consultation on the future of vehicle testing centres.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 10 February, Official Report), column 659.

Unleaded Fuel

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest figures for (a) how many and (b) what proportion of (i) new cars use unleaded fuel and (ii) car owners have converted their cars to unleaded fuel, and what proportion this is of cars that can be converted, (iii) new cars have a catalytic converter and (iv) car owners have a catalytic converter fitted.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All new petrol-engined cars manufactured since 1 October 1990 have had to be capable of running on unleaded petrol, deliveries of which in November 1992 amounted to 49·2 per cent. of the total figure of 1,925,987 tonnes for deliveries of motor spirit. The number and proportion of older cars adapted to use unleaded is unknown. Since 31 December 1992 virtually all new petrol-engined cars have been fitted with catalysts; and of the total car fleet of some 22·9 million vehicles, the proportion fitted with these devices is currently about 5 per cent.

A1 Motorway

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 385, if he will publish a breakdown of the operational costs of the proposed A1 motorway between Redhouse and Hook Moor.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The first year operational costs of £80 million in respect of the announced preferred route for this scheme is broken down as follows:

Costs		£ millions
(i)	time	25·136
(ii)	fuel	12·106
(iii)	other vehicle costs such as depreciation and maintenance	41·948
(iv)	routine maintenance such as sign replacement, drainage renovation and condition inspections	0·314
	Total	[1]79·504

[1] (rounded to £80 million).

Company Cars

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cars were registered for ownership in a company's name in each year since 1973-74; and what estimate he has of the number of people who had such cars in each year.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Information on the registration of cars under a company name is not available before 1976. For the years since 1976 the figures for Great Britain are as shown in the table.

Cars registered for the first time

	(000)	Percentage of all cars registered in year
1976	500	39
1977	580	44
1978	660	42
1979	770	45
1980	630	42
1981	600	40
1982	640	40
1983	710	39
1984	740	42
1985	830	45
1986	860	46
1987	970	48
1988	1,130	51
1989	1,180	51
1990	1,050	52
1991	830	52
1992	830	52

Regular statistics on the number of employees in the United Kingdom taxed on the private use of a company car were not collected by the Inland Revenue before 1978-79. The available figures from 1978-79 onwards are shown in the table.

	(000)
1978-79	550
1980-81	650
1981-82	800
1983-84	850
1985-86	1,050
1987-88	1,550
1988-89	1,750
1989-90	1,850
1990-91	1,950
1991-92	1,900
1992-93	1,850

These figures do not include self-employed people who use their cars for business purposes. It is estimated that in recent years there have been some 2 million people in this category.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Leyland DAF

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is his intention to intervene on behalf of Leyland DAF.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European Commission recently approved assistance by the Italian Government to Fiat for capital investment in an assisted area of Italy. There is currently no equivalent proposal in respect of Leyland DAF.

Bicycles

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make proposals to redress the imbalance in the General agreement on tariffs and trade agreement between the reduction of du[illegible]on imports of complete bicycles and that on componen[illegible].

Mr. Needham: No agreement has yet been finalised in the GATT Uruguay round table negotiations. The latest EC proposal for reduction in the Community's common external tariff, tabled in December 1992, offers no reduction in the current 17 per cent. duty on complete bicycles, but reduces that on components from 8 to 5·5 per cent. In making this revised offer, the EC has stated that it is ready to improve it in further negotiations. The United Kingdom will continue to work for a result which includes the greatest possible reduction in the EC tariff on bicycle components.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which aspects of development proposals for smaller oil and gas fields will be subject to less rigorous assessment by his Department's officials.

Mr. Eggar: We plan, as recommended in the scrutiny that I published on 22 October 1992, to identify a threshold below which the Department would normally expect to give less rigorous scrutiny to questions of reservoir potential in considering field development applications. Applications would, however, have to satisfy the full range of requirements and obligations placed on oil and gas producers.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the categories of information which will no longer be required from oil companies by his Department as a result of the change in regulations on oil and gas field development announced by the Minister for Energy on 22 October 1992.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is implementing the recommendations of the scrutiny that I published on 22 October and we plan to issue comprehensive new guidelines in June 1993. As far as information is concerned, we are reducing monitoring of production from fields already on stream and it is our intention to reduce information accompanying field development applications to the minimum needed to assess acceptability and compliance with relevant obligations. We have already made clear our preparedness, as recommended in the scrutiny, to receive information in the latter category in the companies' own format.

Faraday Centres

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his current plans for the future of the Faraday centres programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has consulted widely on the needs of industry which could be met by a series of "Faraday centres" as proposed by HRH the Prince of Wales's working group on innovation. I have concluded that a strong case for the establishment of Faraday centres does not exist but that the principles underlying the Faraday proposals should be taken forward as part of developing science and technology policy.

The House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology has reached similar conclusions and I refer the hon. Gentleman to my Department's evidence to this Committee published on 20 January 1993—HMSO: HL50.

Export Reinsurance

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many companies, by sector, have been in receipt of export reinsurance from the Export Credits Guarantee Department since December 1991;

(2) how much of Export Credits Guarantee Department expenditure on export reinsurance, since December 1991, went to oil and gas and related companies; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will give details of Export Credits Guarantee Department expenditure on export reinsurance since December 1991; if he will break this information down by sector; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what assessment he has made of the impact of the discontinuation of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's reinsurance provision in 1994 for oil and gas and related industry; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what assessments he has made of the impact of Export Credits Guarantee Department export reinsurance expenditure on the volume and value of United Kingdom exports by sector; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what assessment he has made of the impact of the discontinuation of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's reinsurance provision in 1994 for United Kingdom exports and exporters, by sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 10 February, Official Report, column 672.

Reinsurance is provided only to the privatised successor of ECGD's insurance services group on a global basis and it is not possible to provide a breakdown between the risks, goods, trade, sector or geographical location of the exporters ultimately benefiting.

No expenditure in respect of reinsurance claims has been incurred to date.

BCCI

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost of Touche Ross, in conducting the BCCI receivership from the date of its appointment to 31 December 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The aggregate fees and expenses of the liquidators in relation to the various insolvency proceedings in Luxembourg, England, Scotland and the Isle of Man as agreed by the courts in the relevant jurisdictions totalled US$154 million as at 13 January 1993.

Service Charges

Mrs. Browning: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he intends to make to the report of the sub-committee of the monitoring committee on misleading price indications on service charges in restaurants and hotels.

Mr. Leigh: A committee to monitor and review the operation of the regime established under part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 was set up by my hon. Friend for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) when he was Minister for Consumer Affairs.

The committee referred the question of service charges in hotels and restaurants to a sub-committee drawn from the interests concerned. The sub-committee completed its report, which was endorsed by the main committee, last June.

My hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has considered the recommendations in the report most carefully, but she is not convinced that further legislation would make an effective contribution to solving the problems which can arise over payment for service. She has therefore decided against further regulation in this area at this time.

A copy of the sub-committee's report will be placed in the Library.

Furniture Safety

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of business failures in the shops, auctions and car boot sales markets likely when the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1992 are implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations, as amended, which have been the subject of public consultation have been introduced progressively since 1988. My Department believes that the period of grace provided for non-complying furniture represents a fair balance between the needs of business and the safety interests of consumers. Statistics on the number of businesses supplying upholstered furniture are not available.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now apply the criteria of the deregulation initiative to the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 23 February 1993]: Like all Government regulations, the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988 as amended will be subject to review by the sectoral deregulation task forces of business men which are currently being set up following the Prime Minister's deregulation seminar on 2 February 1993. The deregulation criterion of proportionality between the degree of regulation and the risk of public safety was explicitly addressed during the consultation period preceding the introduction of the regulations.

Company Accounts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times in each year since 1985 the powers conferred by section 448 of the Companies Act 1985 have been used.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 23 February 1993]: My Department does not currently maintain specific records on the number of times the powers under section 448 of the Companies Act are used but we are making plans to do so. However, the powers are seldom used, probably not more than two or three times a year.

Post Office Subsidiaries

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the present investment programme for each Post Office subsidiary for 1993-94.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 February 1993]: The Post Office has not yet completed the allocation among its constituent businesses of the total planned capital investment programme for 1993-94 of £321 million.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what have been the investment programmes for each Post Office subsidiary for the last three complete years, with an estimated outturn for the current year, both in current price and cash terms.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 24 February 1993]: The investment programmes for the principal constituent businesses of the Post Office for the last three financial years and estimated outturn for 1992-93 in both outturn and constant price terms are as follows:

Outturn prices

	1989-90 £ million	1990-91 £ million	1991-92 £ million	1992-93 £ million

Steel

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will estimate the consequences for the British steel industry of the European Commission's restructuring proposals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards EC proposals (a) for additional support for closure costs in the steel industry and (b) for additional restructuring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 24 February 1993]: The Government and British steel industry are in broad agreement that the Commission proposals for restructuring the EC steel industry, including use of European Coal and Steel Community financial resources to provide additional support for the social costs of permanent closures are a positive response to the problems facing the industry. I shall be discussing the Commission's proposals with my EC colleagues today.

WALES

Drug Abuse

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which social services department in Wales has agreed to operate his Department's guidelines for funding drug abuse centres in Wales from April 1993 onwards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has not issued separate guidance relating specifically to the funding of residential facilities for drug misusers. General guidance has, however, been issued on the financing of community care, including the sum transferred from the Department of Social Security.

Local councils are, therefore, aware of the amounts being transferred to them and of the purpose for which the amounts are intended; including services for drug misusers. We will be monitoring how councils spend these sums.

Youth Training

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the estimates given by training and enterprise councils for each month since they were available of (a) the number of young people seeking a youth training place, (b) the number of young people who left school in 1991 who were seeking a youth training place, (c) the number of young people who left school in 1992 who were seeking a youth training place and (d) the number of young people in the special training needs category who were seeking a youth training place; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I will write to the hon. Lady.

Dentists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general dental practitioners in Wales in each area health authority are offering to provide NHS treatment to existing and new patients from 1 April; how many are offering NHS treatment to existing but not to new patients; and how many are offering no NHS treatment at all from 1 April.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. General dental practitioners are independent contractors and, as such, they are free to decide how much of their time they wish to devote to NHS work and how many patients they wish to have on their lists. The figures on the number of dentists practising in Wales as at 30 September 1992 are as follows:

Family health services authority area	Number of dentists
Clwyd	102
Dyfed	105
Gwent	135
Gwynedd	66
Mid Glamorgan	133
Powys	35
South Glamorgan	127
West Glamorgan	128
TOTAL	831

Returns from family health services authorities in Wales indicate that 25 general dental practitioners gave written notice to have their name removed from dental lists between 1 August 1992 and 12 February 1993. During that period, 47 dentists joined the dental lists and are offering a full range of NHS services.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the cost of waste disposal for each local authority in Wales in each year since 1990; and if he will publish estimated waste disposal costs for 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information available is given in the table. There are no estimated figures held centrally for 1993-94 since local authorities are still in the process of setting their budgets.

(a) Outturn.

(b) Net current expenditure is defined as expenditure on employees and running expenses, less sales, fees, charges, internal recharges and other non-grant income but gross of specific government grants.

(c) Gross capital expenditure is defined as the provision, acquisition and enhancement of tangible fixed assets which continue to be of value long after their acquisition.
(d) Provisional.
(e) Budgets. Information for capital expenditure is not available.

Community Care (Housing Management)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to secure that housing management issues affecting older people and disabled people are considered as part of the care in the community programme.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Sound housing management is fully recognised as essential for all those who will need care in the community. Social services departments are required to liaise with housing departments in the perparation of their social care plans.

Rural Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total value of supplementary credit approvals granted by his Department for developing housing in rural Wales during each of the last two years; and what is the estimated amount to be allocated for 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A variety of measures assist the development of rural housing in Wales as detailed in the table:

£ million

	1991-92 Outturn	1992-93 Planned outturn	1993-94 Plans
Rural Housing	3·8	4·3	4·0
Private Rented Sector	2·3	2·6	[1]—

Housing for Wales[2]	32·0	35·0	34·0

[1] The distribution of these reserves for 1993-94 between rural and urban authorities and which are worth, in total, £28·5 million, has yet to be decided.

[2] Base programme only—does not include transfers from local authorities.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of his departmental annual report 1993 and expenditure plans for 1993 to 1996 Cm 2215, have been printed; at what cost; and to whom it has been distributed.

Mr. David Hunt: Some 2,500 copies of the Welsh Office departmental report, Cm 2215, were printed. The costs of printing and publication were borne by HMSO which aims to recover costs from sales revenue. As in previous years, the Department purchased copies for its own use; 425 copies were purchased at a cost of £4,154.

Copies are sent to the chief executives of the non-departmental public bodies and agencies for which the Department has some responsibility; to the chief executives of local authorities in Wales and the secretaries of the Council of Welsh Districts and Assembly of Welsh Counties; to health authorities in Wales; and to training and enterprise councils. Copies are also sent to all MPs with Welsh constituencies, and to the Welsh Affairs and the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committees. The Department also retains copies for internal distribution.

The Department also reimburses HMSO for the lost revenue in pricing the bilingual report as a single-language document. This cost for the 1993 report was £4,966.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase grant aiding provision to householders in Wales to assist with (a) loft insulation, (b) hot water tank and hot water system lagging, (c) cavity wall insulation, (d) double glazing and (e) draught excluder systems.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The house renovation grant system can already provide assistance for these works. Changes that I announced last July, which will come into effect in early April, will improve targeting to those in greatest need.

Clean Technology

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a national clean production centre in Wales to provide technical information, advice and training on clean technology methods.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government are committed to establishing a cleaner technology centre and are, at present, investigating the best way to provide such a service.

However, as yet no decision has been made as to its location.

Drinking Water

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dwellings in Wales are currently supplied with water where lead concentrations exceed the latest World Health Organisation guidelines.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available in the form requested. However, information about lead concentrations in water supplies in Wales is contained in "Drinking Water 1991", the second annual report by the chief inspector of the drinking water inspectorate and in the document "Nitrate, Pesticides and Lead, 1989 and 1990", published by the inspectorate in July 1992.

Wave Power

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to adapt the coastal barrage schemes operational and planned in Wales for use as dual-purpose tidal generator systems.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for individual developers to consider adapting coastal barrage schemes for use as dual-purpose tidal generator systems.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to promote energy conservation within large commercial buildings through the use of (a) revolving entrance doors and (b) double-glazing.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office energy efficiency office is vigorously encouraging energy efficiency in a wide variety of ways in buildings in both the private and public sectors.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

London Marathon

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage for what reasons the London marathon is being charged for the use of the royal parks; and into what headings the fee is broken down.

Mr. Key: The Department manages the royal parks on behalf of the Crown for the enjoyment of the public. Where an event is allowed to use the park and will significantly affect the normal use of the park by the general public, we require them to pay a fee which is calculated on the basis of the area used. The fee is not made up of specific charges under particular headings. It is levied to cover such matters as remedial works following large events, additional safety responsibilities, to compensate for disruption and to assist the parks to improve facilities for park users.

Royal Parks

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the charitable events which have been charged fees for the use of the royal parks during the course of the past three years and detail the amount paid in each case.

Mr. Key: We have charged charitable events in the past three years as follows. It should be noted that all the charges were set before the new charging policy was promulgated in July last year. No events have taken place under the new arrangements.

Chief Rabbi's Walk for Charity	100
Terry Fox Marathon	100

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the normal fee charged by his Department for the use of royal parks for charitable events; and how the fee is arrived at.

Mr. Key: There is no set fee. The charge is calculated on the basis of the area used and the number of days the park is occupied.

EMPLOYMENT

Business Start-up Scheme

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms have been helped under the business start-up scheme in each of the last five years; and how many are still in business.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of individuals who started a new business under the scheme in each of the last five years is given in the table. These figures do not equate exactly to the number of businesses started, since for some businesses more than one individual will have been supported.

Business Start-Up Scheme Entrants

Year	Number
1987-88	106,300
1988-89	98,500
1989-90	77,900
1990-91	60,300
1991-92	50,400

Information is not available on how many are still in business.

Unemployed Graduates

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate has been made of the number of university graduates who are at present unemployed and of the breakdown of the figure by degree category.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest estimate for Great Britain from the summer—June to August—1992 labour force survey is that there were 169,000 people of working age, qualified to degree or equivalent level or above, who were unemployed on the internationally standard International Labour Organisation definition, not seasonally adjusted.

Estimates of unemployed graduates by degree category are all below 10,000.

Self-employment

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has of the number of self-employed people who are currently without gainful employment; what changes have taken place in these estimates over the past three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The most recent estimate of the number of people unemployed on the internationally agreed ILO definition who were previously self-employed is from the summer—June to August—labour force survey. This, together with estimates over the previous three years, is shown in the following table;

Great Britain (not seasonally adjusted)

	number
Spring 1990	111,000
Spring 1991	188,000
Spring 1992	279,000
Summer 1992	275,000

Unemployed People

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the United Kingdom are unemployed, economically active, but not receiving unemployment benefit.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The labour force survey shows that in spring 1922 there were 910,000 people who were ILO unemployed, and therefore economically active, but not receiving unemployment related benefits in the United Kingdom. Conversely there were 890,000 people receiving unemployment related benefits who were not ILO unemployed. In spring 1992, there were 2·732 million ILO unemployed and 2·717 million people claiming unemployment related benefits in the UK. These figures are not seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have become unemployed in each region of the United Kingdom since 11 April 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Work Permits

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits for employment within the United Kingdom have been awarded over each of the last five years for which figures are available; and which were the top five countries of origin in each year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of work permits for employment excluding work experience approved for each of the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1988	29,283
1989	33,899
1990	39,343
1991	34,448
1992	34,259

These figures include employees of multi-national companies who are transferred to the United Kingdom.

The following table shows for the same period in descending order the five countries whose nationals were issued the greatest number of work permits:

1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
USA	USA	USA	USA	USA
Japan	Japan	Japan	Japan	Japan
India	Australia	Australia	India	India
Australia	India	India	Australia	Australia
Canada	Canada	Canada	Canada	Canada

Women Workers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will set out the principal regulations governing women returning to work after childbirth, in each region of the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The principal legislation giving qualifying women a right to return to work after maternity absence is contained in the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 for Great Britain and in the Industrial Relations (No. 2) (Northern Ireland) Order 1976. In addition, the Public Health Act 1936 for England and Wales, the Factories Act 1961 for Scotland and the Factories Act (Northern Ireland) 1965 prohibit the employment of a woman in a factory within four weeks of giving birth to a child.

The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill will provide important new rights for all women employees to take 14 weeks' maternity leave. When enacted, the relevant provisions will be brought into effect in Northern Ireland by Order in Council under the negative resolution procedure.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to increase female availability for work.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made clear her intention to ensure that women are able to play as full a role as possible in the world of work. In Manchester on 20 January my right hon. Friend launched a series of regional events entitled "New Horizons for Women" to promote the whole range of opportunities open to women, including employment and training. The flexibility built in to many employment service and training and enterprise council programmes are ideally suited to the needs of women who wish to combine work with other responsibilities and our new out of school child care grant will particularly benefit women who wish to resume work after their children start school.

Youth Training

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment after deducting the cost of the training allowance paid direct to a 16 or 17-year-old on a Government training scheme, how much money is made available for the actual training.

Mr. McLoughlin: Training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are paid an overall price per youth training—YT—trainee week and national vocational qualification delivered, from which minimum training allowances must be paid. Information is not available on the overall amounts of training allowance paid out to 16 and 17-year-olds. Around one third of YT trainees are employed and are paid a wage. TECs also receive financial contributions from employers towards the cost of training.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the estimates given to her by training and enterprise councils for each month since they were available, broken down for each region and for England as a whole, of (a) the total number of young people seeking a youth training place, (b) the number of young people who left school in 1991 who were seeking a youth training place, (c) the number of young people who left school in 1992 who were seeking a youth training place and (d) the number of young people in the special training needs category who were seeking a youth training place; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The reports sent to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by TECs were not formal returns, and were not in the form requested.

Enterprise Allowance

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of enterprise allowance claimants are still pursuing the business of which they received an allowance a year after the allowance was exhausted.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available.

Wages Council Rates

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job centres are advertising jobs at rates of pay below the relevant wages council minimum; and what steps she takes to monitor the extent to which her Department's rules on the subject are followed.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mrs. Maria Fyfe, dated 25 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the number of Jobcentres advertising rates of pay below the relevant Wages Council minimum and what steps she takes to monitor the extent to which her Department's rules on the subject are followed. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Jobcentres do not advertise vacancies which offer rates of pay below the relevant Wages Council minimum. Jobcentres have comprehensive instructions giving guidance to staff on the action to be taken when a vacancy covered by a Wages Council Order is notified. If the employer is unwilling to pay the Wages Council minimum then my people are instructed not to accept the vacancy and to refer the case to the Department of Employment Wages Inspectorate. My managers check that the instructions are being followed as part of their standard managerial controls.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Organic Farmers

3. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to provide assistance to organic farmers.

Mr. Gummer: We are considering the most effective way of providing aid for organic farming. I shall be submitting our plans for environmental measures to the Council in July.

EC Rules

14. Miss Lestor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he is having with his European counterparts about securing compliance with European Community rules as they relate to agriculture.

Mr. Gummer: I am persistent in demanding that the Commission produce evidence of compliance on all aspects of Community rules. I am willing to submit our evidence of compliance in the United Kingdom to the Commission and expect other member states to do the same.

16. Mr. Darling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the National Farmers' Union on the question of the implementation of European directives as they relate to agriculture.

Mr. Gummer: I am in frequent contact with the National Farmers Union on all aspects of agricultural policy.

23. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what resources are available in the United Kingdom for the enforcement of European directives as they relate to agriculture.

Mr. Gummer: Both staff and equipment are available for the necessary enforcement of European Community legislation on agriculture.

Food Regulations

15. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to reduce the burden of regulation on food retailers.

25. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to reduce the burden of regulation on food manufacturers and processors.

Mr. Gummer: I have previously written to the British Retail Consortium inviting comments on burdens which food regulations may place upon its members.

I am today circulating more widely a consultation document setting out a possible deregulation programme in the food law sector which would move to a less regulatory system, so reducing unnecessary costs to business, which often are passed on to consumers in higher prices, restrictions on choice and loss of international competitiveness.

We shall of course continue to give full weight to our food safety and consumer protection objectives.

Further action will depend on the results of these consultations, but I envisage some simplifications or repeal of some existing regulations.

Milk Producers

17. Mr. Trend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist milk producers.

Mr. Curry: Dairy farmers have benefited from the Community regime in recent years and the Government will continue to encourage their efficiency and profitability.

Intervention

18. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on trends in the level of intervention stores of food in the EC.

Mr. Curry: Trends in both cereals and beef intervention in the EC have been moving upwards since 1989. Butter and skimmed milk powder stocks, on the other hand, have recently been falling.

Sugar

19. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to report upon changes regarding the European sugar regime.

Mr. Curry: The Commission has proposed that the EC sugar regime should be reviewed by 30 June 1994 and its proposals on the future regime may therefore be expected later this year.

Set-aside

20. Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to provide for the use of set-aside land for the production of energy crops.

Mr. Gummer: Non-rotational set-aside will be introduced this year and we expect this to allow for growing crops for non-food uses. I intend to press the Commission to allow woodland on set-aside, this will include coppicing.

Food Standards

21. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to provide information to the public as soon as his Department is aware of food or drink being sold that does not conform to standards laid down by his Department or the World Health Organisation.

Mr. Soames: We will continue to inform the public on matters relating to food safety and consumer protection whenever the need arises.

Lamb

22. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of United Kingdom lamb production is currently exported.

Mr. Curry: We forecast that 36 per cent. of UK lamb and mutton production, including live animals, was exported in 1992.

Cooked Meat

24. Mr. Faber: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations his Department has made to the European Commission concerning the draft meat products directive as it affects the travel temperature of cooked meat.

Mr. Soames: The single market rules for trade in meat products are set out in directive 92/5/EEC which came into effect in all member states from 1 January 1993. This directive does not include any specific temperature requirements for the transportation of meat products. However, manufacturers are required to indicate on the packaging the recommended temperature at which products must be transported.

26. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in the last six months from potato producers in the United Kingdom about his proposals for the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 18 January 1993, Official Report, column 83.

Surplus EC Food

27. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to widen the distribution of surplus EC food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I am reviewing the operation of the EC surplus food scheme in the United Kingdom. Any changes to the arrangements will be announced when the review has been completed.

Water Pollution

28. Mr. Enright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held with the National Rivers Authority and the water authorities as to how best they can jointly resolve farmers' pollution difficulties.

Mr. Curry: The Department regularly meets the National Rivers Authority and the water industry to discuss water-related issues including pollution from agriculture.

Flooding

29. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the land area in England which is at risk of temporary or permanent flooding in consequence of high tides and the erosion of coastal defences.

Mr. Gummer: It is generally considered that land lying below the 5 m Ordnance Survey contour is most vulnerable and there is some 8,000 sq km of such land in England and Wales.

However, not all such land is at similar risk of flooding, and in these and many other areas the risk of flooding or erosion is reduced by defence works which have been carried out with the assistance of grant aid provided by my Department, now running at some £60 million annually.

Haddock

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider introducing compulsory 90 mm square mesh panels, increasing the mesh size and increasing minimum landing sizes for haddock.

Mr. Curry: I am aware of the mounting concern that new measures will be needed to conserve stocks this year and I am considering what measures will command broad support from the industry.

Pesticides

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to publish the evidence given prior to 1985 on the safety of products reviewed by his Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Mr. Soames: Measures to open up access to information on the safety of pesticides approved before 1986 were announced in August 1992. These will provide for access to all relevant studies submitted to the registration authorities with the application for the approval of a pesticide. To implement these new arrangements amendments to the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 will be required. The necessary legislative proposals are currently being prepared.

Bananas

Mr. Channon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement outlining the details of the European Community's new regime for banana imports.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Council on 9 to 13 February agreed, by qualified majority, a regulation for the common organisation of the EC banana market. This gives effect to the agreement reached on a United Kingdom presidency compromise at the December Council. The key elements of the new arrangements are:

> Continued duty-free access for traditional ACP supplies, up to a level of 857,700 tonnes, reflecting ACP countries' best ever sendings to the EC;
> A low tariff quota of 2 million tonnes for third country and non-traditional ACP fruit. Third country fruit would be subject to a duty of 100 Ecu/tonne; non-traditional ACP fruit would be duty-free;
> A tariff on all sendings outside the tariff quota of 850 Ecu/tonne (750 Ecu/tonne for non-traditional ACP).

Licences for access to the low tariff quota would be allocated:

> 66.5 per cent. on the basis of a three-year rolling average of past trade in third country and non-traditional ACP fruit;
> 30 per cent on the basis of a three year rolling average of past trade in EC and traditional ACP fruit;
> 3.5 per cent. to newcomers.

There remain a number of details to be resolved during negotiations on the implementation of the new regime. The new arrangements are due to come into force on 1 July 1993.

The new arrangements represent a good deal for United Kingdom interests. They complete the single market in bananas; they are compatible with the general approach on agricultural products in the GATT Uruguay round. And most importantly they fulfil our Lomé convention obligations to our traditional ACP suppliers in the Commonwealth Caribbean.

Radioactive Contamination (Irish Sea)

Mr. Lew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional resources he is making available to his Department's radiobiology laboratories to assess radioactive contamination in the Irish sea.

Mr. Curry: In the present financial year, planned expenditure on scientific and technical work directly in support of the Ministry's statutory responsibilities for regulating discharges from nuclear installations is £2·6 million. In addition we shall have spent approximately £1·4 million on studies related to the behaviour of radioactivity in the Irish sea. We shall continue to fund the scientific and technical work necessary to support our responsibilities for the protection of the marine environment, fisheries and the marine food chain.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when payments in respect of hill livestock compensatory allowances will be made payable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Issue of payable orders in respect of claims under the 1993 scheme started on 10 February.

Potato Industry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have taken place with the European Commission concerning the injection of financial assistance into the potato industry in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I am aware of the situation in Northern Ireland following the wet autumn and winter, but it is not our practice to give or seek aid in these circumstances. I understand that the European Commission has rejected similar disaster aid for the Republic of Ireland.

Whaling

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement regarding the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the proposal being made by certain countries for coastal whaling.

Mr. Curry: Our policy towards all forms of commercial whaling—including coastal whaling—has been clear and consistent. We shall not even contemplate the lifting of the present moratorium on commercial whaling—which was agreed by the International Whaling Commission and which came into effect in 1985-86—until we are fully satisfied that whale stocks are proved to be at healthy levels; methods used to take whales are humane; and effective procedures for the management of whale stocks and for their enforcement are in place.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what statements were made by the British International Whaling Commission Commissioner at the special meeting in Madrid of 19 February in respect of Her Majesty's Government's policies towards the possible resumption of commercial whaling;

(2) what protests he made at the exclusion of the International Whaling Commission commissioners from France, Ireland and New Zealand from the invitees to the special meeting held in Madrid on 19 February;

(3) who initiated the special meeting between (a) Japan and (b) Norway and various International Whaling Commission commissioners held in Madrid on 19 February; who decided which countries were to be invited; and what decisions were made.

Mr. Curry: At the invitation of the vice-chairman of the International Whaling Commission, a meeting of a number of IWC commissioners was held in Madrid on 17 and 18 February. IWC commissioners from Australia, Chile, Denmark, Germany, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, the United Kingdom and the USA were present.

Neither the UK nor other contracting parties to the commissioner have "protested" about the meeting itself or those nations invited to it. The meeting was purely informal. A range of issues was discussed, including the revised management scheme, whale sanctuaries, small cetaceans and their management, and aboriginal whaling. No decisions were reached. The discussions enabled the UK to explain its policies, set out at the 44th meeting of the commission in Glasgow, and since.

SCOTLAND

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the estimates given by LECs for each month since they were available of (a) the total number of young people seeking a youth training place, (b) the number of young people who left school in 1991 who were seeking a youth training place, (c) the number of young people who left school in 1992 who were seeking a youth training place and (d) the number of young people in the special training needs category who were seeking a youth training place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I understand from Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise that their local enterprise companies do not make monthly estimates of demand for youth training places.

Environment Protection Agency

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to establish a Scottish environment protection agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I announced in September 1991 that I had decided to set up a Scottish environment protection agency. We issued a public consultation document "Improving Scotland's Environment: The Way Forward" in January 1992, to which we have recieved more than 160 responses.

Under the proposals, the agency would assume the pollution control responsibilities of the three main regulatory bodies, the river purification authorities, the district and islands councils, in respect of waste management and local air pollution, and HM industrial pollution inspectorate. I was encouraged by the number and range of responses to the consultation exercise, several of which contained constructive suggestions. Generally, there is a recognition that the Government are determined to secure the most effective arrangements for protecting Scotland's environment from pollution. I have, therefore, decided that the major proposals in the consultation paper should not be amended.

Nevertheless, misgivings were expressed about the advisory committee structure which had been put forward originally. Having reconsidered these proposals, I believe we can secure scope for the delegation of responsibility within the agency to regional staff without prejudicing its overall control, and for ensuring a worthwhile role for the regional committees. I intend to commission further work on these aspects before legislation is introduced.

I have also decided in the light of responses made to me that it is logical to use this opportunity to give the agency enhanced powers to control water abstraction where such powers have been shown to be necessary, and I intend to issue a consultation paper on this subject shortly. Although I am satisfied that there is no widespread need for such powers, it seems sensible to give the agency the ability to apply controls in areas where problems can be identified.

We are proceeding with work on drafting the necessary legislation to create the agency and define its responsibilities. The Government intend to establish the new body as soon as possible, and legislation will therefore be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

Nimmo Smith/Friel Report

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 447, concerning the placing in the Library of material relating to the Nimmo Smith/Friel report, if he will give the reasons for his decision.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Nurses

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of newly qualified nurses in Scotland in 1992 were given a national health service nursing job.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 18 February 1993]: The exact information requested is not available centrally. The table shows the status of nurses who were final year students in Scotland on 30 September 1991 one year later.

It should be noted that the methods by which this information is collected do not permit account to be taken of certain students, for example those who have been unable to complete their training within the normal three-year period; those who, having qualified, may have chosen to have a break in service before seeking employment; those who have found employment as a nurse outwith the NHS; and those who may have qualified, joined the NHS and left within a census period. Those who qualify and work occasionally in the NHS, for example, bank or agency nurses, also cannot be identified and have therefore been counted with the "not employed" category.

Status of final year basic student nurses in Scotland one year later; year beginning 30 September 1991:

Status at 30 September 1992	Headcount	Per cent.
In post in NHS	1,263	54·1
Taking further training in NHS	26	1·1
Not employed in NHS	1,044	44·7
Total	2,333	100

Shipping Safety

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of EC Environment and Transport Ministers on 25 January to discuss Community aspects of shipping safety.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 28 January, at column 796.

At the meeting on 25 January I outlined the actions taken by my Department in response to the Shetland oilspill and drew some preliminary conclusions from that experience. At my invitation the EC Commissioner for the Environment and Fisheries, Mr. Yannis Paleokrassas, subsequently visited Shetland on 19 February, when he was accompanied by my hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture and the Environment in the Scottish Office.

Further Education Lecturers

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up an independent review into the salaries of lecturing staff in further education colleges in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 29 January 1993]: I have no plans to do so.

DEFENCE

Standing Orders

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is a chargeable offence for serving members of the armed forces (a) to be in breach of unit standing orders and (b) not to have read unit standing orders.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is a chargeable offence under service law to fail to comply with any provision of unit standing orders of which the person concerned knew or might reasonably be expected to have known. Unless the unit standing orders in question themselves provided that they were to be read by the person concerned, or that there was a requirement to do so in some other orders, failure to read unit standing orders would not in itself be an offence but would provide no defence for failing to comply with them.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what means unit standing orders are made accessible to all ranks serving in the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Service personnel are required to acquaint themselves with standing orders which are prominently displayed within units on notice boards, in messes and such other suitable places as the commanding officer may direct.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will designate the deployment of British forces with the United protection force in former Yugoslavia as an operational deployment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British forces serving with the United Nations in the former Yugoslavia are deployed operationally. No advantage is seen in, or would attach to, a formal declaration of their status in the circumstances currently applying there.

Bosnia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to improve the availability of telephones to service men in Bosnia to contact their families.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We attach a high priority to ensuring that service personnel are able to keep in contact with their families in the United Kingdom and elsewhere, including by telephone. The provision of telephone facilities in Bosnia for welfare calls depends to an extent on where service personnel are deployed and whether civilian facilities exist. We have recently increased the availability of military satellite links for welfare calls where civilian facilities are not available. The present arrangements are believed to be adequate, given the operational circumstances. The situation, however, remains under review.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the sleeping accommodation which has been used by the 200 REME personnel at Vitez, Bosnia, since November 1992; how many toilets and showers are available for those soldiers; and if he will make a statement on the delay in commissioning the purpose-made accommodation units on an adjacent site.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 98 REME personnel and a mixture of 182 other troops from 1 Cheshire, national support element and 1 Cheshire light aid detachment live and work at the site known as Vitez garage. At Vitez garage there are four European lavatories, four urinals and two showers. The showers run with hot water 24 hours a day. There are plans to build a further 13 toilets, nine urinals and 10 showers in purpose-built units which are on site but have yet to be commissioned. Additional ablution facilities are available at the Vitez school site 2·5 kms away. The delay in installing 35 four-man purpose-built accommodation units at the Vitez garage site resulted from a revision of engineer priorities towards base hardening following the shelling of Tomislavgrad; long procurement lead times, both in the United Kingdom and Croatia, for units, electrical switchgear and wiring; and adverse weather conditions with permafrost, ice, snow and low temperatures (−30 degrees Celsius) delaying site preparations.

Army Pay

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish an indicative table showing the approximate net weekly pay of a lieutenant, a sergeant and a private soldier serving in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany and (c) former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Rates of basic pay are not dependent upon location of deployment. It makes no difference whether a soldier is serving in the United Kingdom, Germany or the former Yugoslavia. The following are approximate weekly net rates of pay for the stated ranks:

Lieutenant after 4 years	268
Private 1 Band 2 Scale B	177
Sergeant Band 5 Scale B	263

These illustrative net rates apply to married personnel and do not take account of deductions made for food and accommodation charges which do vary depending on a whole range of factors including the servicemen's rank, marital status and the type and size of service accommodation occupied. Food and accommodation charges have been waived in the former Yugoslavia in recognition of the conditions under which personnel are serving there.

HMS Andromeda

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the last refit of HMS Andromeda was carried out; and what it cost.

Mr. Aitken: The last refit of HMS Andromeda was carried out at Rosyth royal dockyard. The final cost certificate has not yet been cleared but the total cost is estimated to be about £30 million.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Andromeda is due to be retired from the fleet.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to discuss pay-off dates for individual vessels.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the last refit of HMS Andromeda was carried out.

Mr. Aitken: Between August 1990 and December 1991.

HMS Sirius

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why HMS Sirius has been retired from the fleet ahead of schedule.

Mr. Aitken: As announced by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Defence on 25 July 1990, at column 469, we are moving towards a future destroyer/frigate force of around 40 ships. In order to do this we are paying off the older, more manpower intensive vessels such as the Leander class frigates, and introducing modern, more capable vessels such as the type 23 frigates. As part of this process HMS Sirius, at 27 the oldest of the remaining Leander class frigates, was recently retired from service.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of refitting HMS Sirius at Devonport dockyard in 1991.

Mr. Aitken: About £25 million at current prices.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence between which dates the refit of HMS Sirius was carried out at Devonport dockyard.

Mr. Aitken: Between October 1989 and May 1991.

HMS Challenger

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Challenger last underwent a refit.

Mr. Aitken: HMS Challenger has never undergone a refit. Its last repair period was for docking and essential defects during the period April 1990 to July 1990.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the most recent refit of HMS Challenger was carried out; and what it cost.

Mr. Aitken: HMS Challenger has never undergone a refit.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for HMS Challenger in the future.

Mr. Aitken: HMS Challenger has no further operational role in the Royal Navy. Efforts to sell the ship continue.

Chipmunk Training

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of Chipmunk training at Plymouth airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to change the arrangements for carrying out Royal Navy flying training at Plymouth airport. The current contract for the management of this training will expire in March 1994 and a replacement contract is under negotiation.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost per annum of the Chipmunk training at Plymouth airport.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated annual cost of Chipmunk training at Plymouth airport is £640,000.

Eurofighter 2000

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reconfigure the development programme of Eurofighter 2000.

Mr. Aitken: The development programme for Eurofighter 2000 is now being revised to reflect the decisions taken at the quadripartite ministerial meeting on 10 December 1992. First deliveries of production aircraft to the Royal Air Force will be delayed until 2000, and the development programme and associated expenditure will be slowed down, to the maximum extent possible without increasing overall costs and risk, to match this timescale. While the key performance parameters of the aircraft will not be changed, the partner nations are reviewing with the manufacturers the list of possible changes to the aircraft's equipment fit, and changes to the operational requirement, which emerged from the two studies conducted last year. It will be for each nation to decide the extent to which such changes to the aircraft specification are compatible with its military requirements, and if it wishes to take advantage of the cost savings which they offer. These decisions will be reflected in the revised programme and amendments to the inter-government memorandum of understanding which, it is planned, should be signed in the second half of this year.

Correspondence

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reply to letters to him from the hon. Member for Exeter sent on 25 January, 3 February and 9 February concerning the choice of Glasgow for the site of the new Army personnel office.

Mr Archie Hamilton: I wrote to the hon. Member on 23 February.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much the numbers of unemployed claimants have changed since June 1987 in (a) London constituencies and (b) constituencies where a colliery has closed in the past five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on colliery closures by parliamentary constituency is available only for the financial years from 1987-88 to 1991-92.

In the London parliamentary constituencies claimant unemployment has risen by 109,603 since June 1987. This compares with a fall of 28,134 in the parliamentary constituencies where a colliery has closed.

These figures are on the unadjusted basis and are therefore affected by both seasonal influences and by changes in the coverage of the count.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the contracts awarded by her Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd., (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the precise form requested is available only at disproportionate cost. However, I am able to provide some limited information relating to contracts for 1992-93.

Coopers and Lybrand Management Consultants
Two contracts for Management of Change seminars following a review of the Department's Training Enterprise and Education Directorate.
Five contracts related to case studies and evaluation for learning initiatives and aspects of training.
A socio-economic overview towards a co-ordinated strategy for the Department's Office for Wales.
A review of the implications of contracting out to Careers Service providers.
Three contracts related to market testing in some branches of the Department.

Touche-Ross Management Consultants
Advice on aspects of market testing for part of the Department
Two contracts related to dissemination of information for flexible and open learning.

Price Waterhouse Management Consultants
Four Contracts related to some organisational issues in the Department's Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate, the Employment Service and Training Enterprise Councils (TECs).
Consultancy on tax issues arising from budget proposals

Ernst and Young Management Consultants
Three contracts related to strategy reviews and evaluation for information systems and TECs.
Four contracts related to market testing in some branches of the Department.

Chrichton Roberts Ltd.
None.

KPMG Management Consultants
A review of the training development arrangements in the Department's Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate.
A feasibility study on output related funding for TECs.
Two contracts related to market testing in two divisions of the Department.
A study of the distribution of the Health and Safety Executive publications.
A review of the roles and functions SEOs/business managers in the Department.
Two contracts for production and dissemination of extensions for manuals on key skills for the training of trainers.
Presentation of a training workshop on agencies.
Consultancy on a corporate plan for the Department's staff development branch.

Leopold Joseph Management Consultants
None.

Details of costs cannot be disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Restart Scheme

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have taken part in the Restart scheme in the Durham city area; and how many went on to full-time employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 26 February 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about Restart. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

It may help if I explain the scope and purpose of the Restart programme which was launched nationally in 1986. All people who have been unemployed for six months or more are asked to attend regular, six monthly, interviews with one of my Client Advisers. The aim of the programme is to ensure that all long-term unemployed people know about and get access to the employment and training opportunities available locally to them.

At each Restart interview the client will discuss with the adviser their individual situation and circumstances with the aim of reaching an agreement on the best way to return to work. This could be directly by submission to a job vacancy or else through a course of action which will improve their chances of finding work. For example training, a place in a Jobclub, the opportunity of self employment or a place on a Restart course which they can attend at any time. If people remain unemployed for two years or more and decline or fail to take up an offer of help at a Restart interview they are then required to attend a Restart Course.

We collect statistics on the number of Restart interviews and the outcomes of those interviews through our Area Offices. It is not, therefore possible to provide the figures you have requested for Durham City. However, for the period between April 1992 to January 1993 we conducted 28,525 Restart interviews in the County Durham Area and as a result 1,391 people subsequently started on a Restart Course.

Restart Courses are not simply about applying for jobs. Research has shown that many people suffer a loss of confidence and motivation after a long spell of unemployment. The Restart Course, which normally lasts one week, aims to help such people set new and realistic goals for themselves, to feel confident about achieving them and to develop an action plan. This will help them apply for jobs or other employment or training opportunities to help them back into work. A Restart Course should be seen as a stepping stone often a very necesary one towards more help.

Restart Courses have a proven track record of helping people. During the year April 1992 to December 1992, some 78,000 people nationally completed a Restart Course and of these 70,000, 90 per cent. went on to apply for a job or were referred to another opportunity. The figures for people who attended courses in Durham City are not available. However, in the County Durham Area for the period April 1992 to January 1993 1,289 people completed a Restart Course and of these 1,211, 94 per cent. applied for a job or were referred to another opportunity.

We do not collect regular information on the numbers of people who subsequently start jobs. However, a recent national survey showed that 9·4 per cent. of the respondents were either in a job or waiting to start one. Many more had, of course, gone on to join another programme such as Jobclub or training.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this reply in the Library of the House.

Summerfield Ltd.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when Summerfield Ltd. was granted a licence as an employment agency.

Mr. McLoughlin: Summerfield Limited has not applied for a licence to operate as an employment agency under the Employment Agencies Act 1973.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Divorce

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the timetable for the implementation of the Law Commission's proposals to reform the law on divorce.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no immediate plans for implementation of the Law Commission's recommendations for reform of divorce law. He continues to welcome views on these recommendations and will consult further before any measures on this subject are introduced.

Legal Aid and Advice

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average payment for legal aid and advice during each of the last five years in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The average payment for legal aid and advice during each of the last five years was as follows:

	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
England and Wales	236	269	299	342	377
Scotland	234	210	237	253	268
Northern Ireland	181	185	178	223	246

Separate figures for England and for Wales are not available.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications for legal aid were successful in each of the last five years in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of applications for legal aid granted in each of the last five years, in percentage terms, were as follows:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Civil legal aid certificates
England and Wales	67·1	63·8	61·7	69·2	75·2
Scotland	57·2	69·1	69·3	76·3	69·4
Northern Ireland	74·0	77·0	78·0	76·0	85·0
Criminal legal aid orders
England and Wales	91·6	92·3	92·7	93·1	92·8
Scotland (summary proceedings only)	86·7	92·6	88·7	92·5	91·2
	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Northern Ireland (grants by magistrates' courts only)	96·7	96·8	97·0	97·6	98·1

Separate figures for England and for Wales are not available. Criminal legal aid in Scotland is granted in the first instance by the courts and in appeal cases by the Scottish Legal Aid Board. In Northern Ireland all criminal legal aid is granted by the courts. The information requested is held centrally in Scotland and in Northern Ireland only in respect of applications and grants of legal aid at summary level.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average expenditure per head of the population on legal aid in each of the last five years in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Average expenditure per head of the population on legal aid in each of the last five years was as follows:

	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
England and Wales	8·85	9·69	11·51	13·88	18·50
Scotland	8·46	10·61	10·59	12·59	15·27
Northern Ireland	5·57	7·77	7·38	8·24	9·47

Separate figures for England and for Wales are not available.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of the legal aid granted in R. v. Ward; and what was the value of the overseas assets shown by Mr. Ward.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost to legal aid of this case has yet to be determined. Information as to personal means is confidential.

County Court Judgments

Mr. Channon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to inform hon. Members and the general public of the conclusions he reaches after his evaluation of the question of county court judgments carrying interest has been completed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As is the usual practice of the Lord Chancellor's Department, any proposals arising out of the July 1991 initiatives to extend the provision of interest on county court judgments would be widely circulated and views sought from interested parties including the legal profession; county court user groups; advice agencies; business organisations and the judiciary. Again, following our usual practice, respondents to consultation would be informed directly of the outcome of the consultation exercise before implementation and there would be widespread general publicity.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Textiles

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies were carried out by his Department into the market for polyester textiles in the United Kingdom and the EC prior to authorisation of financial assistance for the Indonesian textile group Texmaco; and what were the conclusions of these studies.

Mr. Atkins: In February 1991 and again in February/March 1992, IDB carried out specific research into the European market for micro-denier polyester fabrics. These studies established that:

1. the world textile market is expected to show consistent growth through to the year 2000; and
2. there was an excess of imports over exports in the European Community market for micro denier polyester fabrics, the products which the company proposes to manufacture in Northern Ireland.

It was concluded, therefore, that with a competitive cost base in Northern Ireland the company could achieve its forcast share of the European Community market, primarily at the expense of imports.

Planning Applications

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of planning applications received in the last 12 months for each district council in Northern Ireland; how many of these were approved by the planning department; and how many were rejected.

Mr. Atkins: The available information relates to the number of applications received and the number determined in the period in question and is as follows:

Period January 1992-December 1992

District Council Area	Number of applications received	Number of applications approved	Number of applications refused
Antrim	563	503	61
Ards	859	782	133
Armagh	818	844	49
Ballymena	750	715	53
Ballymoney	327	336	8

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests were received by the planning department for article 31 inquiries in the last 12 months for each district council in Northern Ireland; and how many of their requests were accepted.

Mr. Atkins: In 1992 six requests were received from Castlereagh borough council and in one instance article 31 was applied and one was received from Belfast city council which was refused.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many appeals were made to the planning directorate for each district council in Northern Ireland in the last 12 months; and on how many occasions the planning directorate supported the council's view.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:

Electricity Disconnections

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of incidents where domestic electricity supply has been disconnected in each constituency in Northern Ireland, in the last 12 months.

Mr. Atkins: Northern Ireland Electricity does not hold information on electricity supply disconnections by parliamentary constituency.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of incidents where domestic water supply has been disconnected in each constituency in Northern Ireland, in the last 12 months.

Mr. Atkins: The water supplied to a property which is used solely for domestic purposes is not metered and is not subject to disconnection for non-payment of an account.

The water supply to a property which has mixed domestic and other use may be metered and would be subject to disconnection where an account remains unpaid.

A number of metered supplies which include a domestic content have been disconnected during 1992. Details are shown in the table.

Information on disconnections is not held by parliamentary constituency and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Money Lenders

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to assess the extent of problems being created by the existence of illegal money lenders; and what steps are being taken to combat these problems.

Mr. Atkins: In Northern Ireland the Department of Economic Development's trading standards branch shares enforcement responsibility for the Consumer Credit Act 1974 with the Director General of Fair Trading.

The branch actively enforces this Act throughout the Province and takes appropriate enforcement action where breaches of the legislation are detected and supporting evidence is available.

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 24 February 1993]: A total of 852 contracts for consultancies were awarded from April 1991 to March 1992 and 491, excluding figures for the Department of Economic Development which are not yet available, from April 1992 to date.

ENVIRONMENT

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many incidents involving the reportable release of radiation from British Nuclear Fuels' Sellafield site have taken place since 1979; and what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to improve (a) safety and (b) speed of reporting of accidents at Sellafield to the appropriate authorities.

Mr. Maclean: Current criteria for reporting incidents at nuclear sites were most recently revised by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy on 30 April 1987, Official Report, column 203.

Information about reportable incidents prior to November 1986 is not immediately available. Since then, my Department has recorded four reportable incidents involving off-site releases of radioactivity from the BNF Sellafield site. A statement of reportable incidents at nuclear sites is published quarterly by the nuclear installations inspectorate, and copies are held in the House Library.

(a) Responsibility for the safety of nuclear licensed sites is a matter for the operator. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate ensures compliance with nuclear site licence conditions, and has a range of measures available to rectify and failure to meet the high standards of safety it requires.

(b) The Goodlad criteria, which are reviewed periodically, stipulate that incidents shall be reported within 24 hours.

Plague Pits

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the location of plague pits for buried corpses in urban areas.

Mr. Maclean: The Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England holds records on archaeological sites which include some details of burial sites of plague victims. Any such sites discovered in the course of archaeological excavations must be reported to the Health and Safety Executive.

Community Charge

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost of administration in percentage terms of the community charge to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Charging authorities in England budgeted to collect about £23·5 billion of community charges in total for the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93. The estimated cost to authorities of collecting this sum is about £1·4 billion, which is 6 per cent. of the estimated yield.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the actual expenditure on departmental publicity to planning matters for each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: The information in respect of publicity relating to planning matters, excluding staff costs, is as follows:

Year	Expenditure £
1987-88	118,000
1988-89	51,000
1989-90	104,000
1990-91	65,000
1991-92	122,000
1992-93	[1]143,000

---

[1] Forecast.

It is not possible to identify related staff costs. Expenditure figures for 1979-80 to 1986-87 are not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Floating Helipads

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the provisions governing the granting of planning permission for floating helipads on rivers.

Mr. Baldry: There are no provisions governing the granting of planning permission which are specific only to floating helipads on rivers, as distinct from other development proposals.

Partnership for Change Conference

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the partnership for change conference to be held in Manchester later this year.

Mr. Howard: We intend to hold an international conference, "Partnership for Change", in Manchester in September on the implementation of the earth summit agreements. I have invited a small number of eminent people to join an international advisory group to advise me on the preparations for the conference, and in particular on themes, outputs and participants. The group is chaired by Dr. Martin Holdgate, director general of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature. The members are: Mr. Delmar Blasco, Mr. Claude Fussler, Dr. Hiroya Ichikawa, Mrs. Yolanda Kakabadse, Dr. Ashok Khosla, Ms. Rachel Kyte, Mr. Warren Lindner, Mr. Michael Ndubiwa, Professor Michael Scoullos, Mr. Youba Sokona and Mr. Jan-Olaf Willums.

The group held its first meeting on 8 and 9 February and I am considering its detailed recommendations. A report of the group's discussions is available from my Department.

Manchester city council also intends to host a complementary international event, Global Forum, for all sectors concerned with sustainable development and the environment. Manchester city council and I have agreed that "Partnership for Change" should go ahead in September and that Global Forum should follow in the first half of next year, thus maximising the opportunities for an exchange of experience of the implementation of sustainable development.

Partnership for change will be a working conference of invited participants primarily from the local government, business and voluntary sectors on 20-22 September. Global Forum will be an open-access event encompassing many different activities over several days. My Department and Manchester city council will be working together closely in planning the two events.

Council Tax

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent eligibility for the single person discount for council tax purposes is affected by the receipt of income from the independent living fund.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 23 February 1993]: From 1 April 1993, payments to all those people who currently receive money from the independent living fund will be made from a new body, the independent living (extension) fund. Receipt of income from the fund will not affect eligibility for a single person discount for council tax purposes. A discount will apply to any single adult dwelling regardless of the resident's income.

Payments from the independent living (extension) fund will be fully disregarded for council tax benefit purposes.

DEFENCE

Standing Orders

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the standing orders of each unit in all branches of the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are over 2,000 ships and establishments within the armed forces and each is required to produce standing orders relevant to its own particular location and role. We have no objection in principle to publishing the standing orders for a specific ship or establishment, subject to security considerations, but to do so for every ship and establishment would entail disproportionate cost and effort.

UNPROFOR II

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of British soldiers deployed with UNPROFOR II; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 23 February 1993 there were 2,426 British soldiers deployed with UNPROFOR Bosnia-Herzegovina command.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 255-56, to the hon. Member for Upminster (Sir N. Bonsor), what is the total number of personnel who will be replacing the forces currently deployed as part of UNPROFOR II in May.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total number of personnel who will be replacing the British units currently deployed with UNPROFOR Bosnia-Herzegovina command is 2,188.

Government Contracts (Report)

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the report by the review board for Government contracts on its seventh general review of the profit formula for non-competitive government contracts.

Mr. Aitken: The Government have accepted the overall target rate of return on capital employed as recommended by the review board in its report. The new rate will be 19 per cent. compared with the current rate of 21 per cent., both on the basis of historic costs. It will be effective from 1 March this year. There are other points in the report which officials will be discussing with the CBI as part of our continuing drive to secure maximum value for money from our defence contracts. The report is now being printed and copies will be placed in the Library in due course.

Secondary Medical Care

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the review of United Kingdom secondary medical care in the armed forces has now been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The review of future requirements for secondary care in the armed forces has now been completed. It confirmed that the primary purpose of military hospital beds was to train armed forces medical services personnel for their roles in war. It concluded that around 1,500 hospital beds will be required in the United Kingdom. We aim to provide 1,100 to 1,200 of these in service hospitals and the remainder in wards staffed by armed forces personnel in NHS hospitals, subject to discussions with the NHS authorities concerned. There would then be a requirement for only four service hospitals in the United Kingdom.

Our aim in these discussions will be to examine the feasibility of establishing wards manned by armed forces personnel in hospitals in Salisbury and East Anglia, and at Plymouth, where such discussions are already in hand. we shall also be exploring the possibility of co-operating with the NHS in Catterick. In the light of the outcome of these discussions, we would aim to modernise and possibly extend the existing facilities in the service hospitals at Gosport, Aldershot and Wroughton. We would no longer require the service hospitals at Woolwich and Halton; or at Plymouth where we are well on the way towards establishing the joint venture with the NHS.

It is too soon to be certain of the implications for employment at the hospitals concerned but every effort will be made to reduce redundancies to a minimum and ensure offsetting employment wherever possible. We shall now consult the trades unions on details of our plans.

Somalia

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for the withdrawal of the United Kingdom military contribution to the United States-led coalition operation in Somalia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the light of the significantly reduced requirement for relief flights, following the major improvement in the humanitarian situation in Somalia, it has been decided that the two RAF C130 aircraft deployed in support of the US-led humanitarian relief operation in Somalia should cease flying operations in theatre with effect from 28 February and return to the United Kingdom as soon as practicable thereafter. This decision reflects the scaling down of the US presence in Somalia in preparation for the formal handover to UNOSOM II and follows consultation with the US authorities. The RAF operation, which involved the delivery of some 3,000 tonnes of aid, was highly successful and played a key part in alleviating a major humanitarian problem. Those involved, both in theatre and in support, can be congratulated on the professionalism and effectiveness of the United Kingdom effort.

Helicopter Support

Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the management of defence helicopter support.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Specialist offices providing support for the helicopters used by the armed forces are currently located in London, Yeovilton, Harrogate and Andover. Following consultation with the trades unions I have concluded that these should now be brought together at Yeovilton to form the Defence Helicopter Support Authority. The new authority, which will comprise some 170 staff, will be in operation by April 1994. This rationalisation will bring both operational and financial advantages and will place the authority within the area of main military helicopter activity and closer to the helicopter industry. Just under 80 civilian posts will move to Yeovilton from the other locations. We wish to retain skilled staff where possible and steps will be taken to avoid or minimise redundancies. Where these prove unavoidable staff affected will receive the appropriate compensation and will be eligible for the services provided by the MOD redundancy counselling and outplacement service.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what practices have been agreed by the immigration Ministers of the EC states on burden of proof and interpretation of particular articles of the Dublin convention in relation to asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Immigration Ministers of the member states of the European Community meeting in London on 30 November 1992 noted a report from officials on work towards the implementation of the Dublin convention and asked that work on outstanding matters should be taken forward. In current work under the Danish presidency particular attention is being given to means of proof.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what agreement has been reached by the immigration Ministers of the member states of the European Community on the calculation of time periods under the Dublin convention in relation to asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Immigration Ministers of the member states of the European Community meeting in Lisbon on 11 June 1992 agreed conclusions on the calculation of periods of time under the Dublin convention. These stipulate that Saturdays, Sundays and public holidays are to be counted.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the address and the name of the director of the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on Asylum; which persons will have access to information supplied by the United Kingdom to CIREA; what information is to be held by CIREA; and what assessment CIREA has prepared of countries of origin of asylum seekers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: CIREA has no director. Its meetings are serviced by the General Secretariat of the Council. The information it receives is at present passed only to participants representing other member states of the European Community. Consideration is still being given to what information it should receive and circulate: it has concentrated initially on statistics and changes in national legislation. CIREA has not itself prepared any assessment of countries of origin of asylum seekers but will in due course discuss joint evaluations.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration has been given by EC immigration Ministers to the preparation of a manual of practice for applying the Dublin convention in relation to asylum; and what aspects such a manual is intended to cover.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Consideration is currently being given to the preparation of a manual covering a range of practical questions.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions have been reached by the immigration Ministers of the member states of the European Community on the transfer of asylum applicants and their applications under the Dublin convention in relation to asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Immigration Ministers of the member states of the European Community meeting in London on 30 November agreed conclusions on the transfer of asylum applicants and their applications. All transfers are to be carried out in accordance with national laws and procedures. An applicant who is liable to transfer to a second member state may travel on his own initiative or accompanied by an official of the first member state.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the document requested by the Strasbourg European Council of Home Affairs Ministers meeting on 8 and 9 December 1989, relating to the substantive law and procedural law of asylum in the EC states.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. This was a working document not intended for publication, and some of its contents are now out of date.

Bail Offenders

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the report to his Department by Patricia Morgan on offending while on bail; a survey of recent studies, in respect of the Northumbria police research into the subject; and what changes he proposes to make in Government policies as a result of the report.

Mr. Jack: The report referred to, published early in 1992 as paper 65 in the Home Office research and planning unit series, drew together and reviewed research into offending on bail carried out by a number of police forces, including Northumbria.

The report referred to the desirability of establishing agreed methods of producing reliable data, on a national basis, about the incidence and extent of offending on bail. This point is currently being pursued by the Home Office in consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers. The Northumbria police are also involved in this work.

As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher) on 28 January at column 789, the incidence of offending on bail is, of course, a matter for concern and work is in hand to tackle the problem, including action research in five areas which is designed to identify the scope for improving the bail decision-taking process, thus minimising the risk of offending on bail.

Domestic Violence Units

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many domestic violence units there are in south Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are three family protection units covering the force area, which are responsible for both domestic violence and child abuse.

Criminal Records

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress with the establishment of the national criminal records system; and when he proposes to publish the consultation document on the use of information to be held by the NCRS.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Progress is well in hand towards the implementation of the first phase of the national criminal records system—the updating and retrieval of criminal records on the police national computer—in the spring of 1994. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to publish by the summer of this year a consultation document on the use of criminal records for employment and related purposes.

Firearms

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to establishing a national firearms board; and when he expects to reach a decision.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A public consultation paper was issued last year proposing that firearms licensing should be administered by a new civilian firearms control board. My right hon. and learned Friend is currently in the process of consulting ministerial colleagues and will make an announcement as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Know-how Funds

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of the current application of the know-how funds by (a) cost, (b) purpose of each project, (c) country where funds are to be used and (d) the British firms or institutions involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A regularly updated list of know-how fund activities by country, cost, purpose and project status is already available from the libraries of the House. To break this down further to include details on each participating British firm and institution would involve disproportionate cost.

Privatisation Programmes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have received or will receive advice on privatisation programmes through the British aid programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Advice on privatisation is provided in response to Government requests and no central records are kept. However, the main beneficiaries of this advice have been and are likely to continue to be in eastern and central Europe and the former Soviet Union. Advice has been provided to Bulgaria, the Czech and Slovak Republics, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Poland, Romania, Russia, Slovenia and Ukraine.

Advice on privatisation to developing countries has been on a smaller scale. Countries benefiting in recent years include Guyana, Jamaica, Pakistan, Tanzania and Zambia.

It is not possible to predict which countries will request advice in the future.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of his reply dated 16 February to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West concerning the auditing arrangements of the Commonwealth development corporation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am arranging for the letter to the hon. Member from my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Slovenia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amounts of aid have been given to the Slovenian Government for the assistance of displaced people and refugees (a) as part of general European Community aid and (b) as direct British aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 23 February 1993]: Figures for direct European Community aid to the Slovenian Government for the assistance of displaced people are not readily available. The United Kingdom has not provided any direct aid to the Slovenian Government for the assistance of displaced people but we have instead provided support to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees who co-ordinates the international community's response to the humanitarian crisis in the former Yugoslavia. In 1992 the UNHCR provided a total of US$10,137,464 for the assistance of displaced people and other victims of the conflict in Slovenia.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of displaced persons and refugees in Slovenia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is responsible for co-ordinating the international relief effort to the former Yugoslavia. Her most recent report, dated 10 February, shows that there are about 75,000 displaced people and refugees in Slovenia.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cycling Holidays

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if his Department will establish a campaign to promote cycling holidays.

Mr. Key : My Department does not fund promotional activities itself. However, boosted by Chris Boardman's gold medal at the Barcelona Olympics, cycling is growing rapidly as a sport and leisure activity. The Manchester velodrome and national cycling centre are under construction. It is for the English tourist board to decide how Government funding of promotional activities is allocated.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the size of waiting lists in Wales for hospital treatments; and what it was at the equivalent period in 1990, 1991 and 1992, respectively.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information for waiting lists as at 31 March in each year is published in table 4.1 of "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin 1992 No. 2" a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

A similar table, giving figures as at 30 September was published in "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin 1993 No. 1" on 24 February 1993.

Dentists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the Welsh family health services authorities concerning requests for help and information in relation to access to NHS dentists from April; what information he has on the total number of requests received by Welsh family health services authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Secretary of State for Wales met chairmen of family health services authorities and district health authorities on 7 July 1992 when general dental services were discussed. A further meeting is planned for 15 April 1993.

According to the fortnightly returns submitted by family health service authorities the number of people seeking assistance in finding dental treatment is as follows:

Fortnight ending	Number of patients contacting FHSAs
14 August 1992	742
28 August	754
11 September	715
25 September	644
9 October	681

4 December	569
18 December	582
1 January 1993	183
15 January	766
29 January	777
12 February	733

The information given in these fortnightly returns is intended for general managerial purposes and is not statistically validated.

Community Charge

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current levels of outstanding community charge payments for each authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information for arrears of community charges relates to the position at 31 March 1992, and is given in the table.

Council House Sales

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the total cumulative sales of local authority dwellings for each authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of sales, following the reorganisation of local authority boundaries in 1974, is given in the following table.

Total Sales of local authority dwellings[1]

Assisted Areas

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to use unemployment statistics from December in each year when making assessments associated with his Department's review of assisted area status in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Because seasonal factors have differing effects in travel-to-work areas, the unemployment statistics used in the review of assisted areas are annual averages.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many contaminated land sites identified by his Department will also appear on the proposed new register of contaminated land sites.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government are currently considering the outcome of the consultation exercise on contaminated land registers which was undertaken last year. An announcement on the way forward will be made as soon as possible. In advance of this it would not be appropriate to attempt to provide the information sought.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the current levels of outstanding rents on council dwellings for each authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities' own forecasts of rent arrears for 31 March 1993 are as follows:

Council Tax

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning council tax single occupancy discount; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have received several representations.

Council tax bills are determined by the valuation band of dwellings, based on their market value at 1 April 1991. Bills also take account of the number and status of adult residents. It is thus a property tax with a personal element.

The personal element represents 50 per cent. of the full bill. If there are two adult residents, there is no reduction in the personal element. But if there is just one adult resident, there is a reduction of 50 per cent. in the personal element, which equates to 25 per cent. of the full bill.

These arrangements are a considerable advance on those which existed under rates, where single adult households received no discount at all.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to increasing the single occupancy discount for council tax.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None, since Parliament approved the Local Government Finance Act 1992.

TECs

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the members of training and enterprise councils presented to him when TECs were originally set up.

Pupils (Expenditure)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the expenditure on each (a) primary school pupil, (b) secondary school pupil and (c) average for all pupils, for the last financial year for which information is available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1990-91 the expenditure on each nursery and primary school pupil in Wales was £1,308 and on each secondary school pupil was £1,953. The average expenditure on all pupils in nursery, primary and secondary schools was £1,570.

School Orchestras

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has had about the future funding of school orchestras in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: To date I have received 13 written representations from Members of Parliament and in excess of 500 from organisations and members of the public about the funding of the school music service in Wales.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"One Girl's War"

Mr. Allason: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current legal status of "One Girl's War" by Joan Millar; and what are the legal costs incurred to date by the Treasury Solicitor.

The Attorney-General: The injunctions granted in England on 28 November 1986 to prevent publication of the book "One Girl's War" by Joan Millar were discharged by consent on 21 October 1992. In proceedings in the Republic of Ireland, although an injunction was originally granted against the publishers, it was discharged on 2 December 1986. The legal costs incurred to date by the Treasury Solicitor are estimated to be £35,000.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the turn-round of correspondence relating to disability allowance applications met his targets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The arrangements for replying to correspondence relating to operational questions on disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 25 February 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the targets for the turnround of correspondence on Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

The Benefit Agency's published target is to respond to all letters from Members of Parliament on all subjects within an average of 20 working days of receipt. Whilst this target is generally being met for letters on matters other than DLA it is currently not being achieved on all letters about DLA and I accept that regrettably some very long delays have been experienced before a reply has been sent. I apologise for this. The delays are due to the backlog of correspondence that has built up in the DLA Unit following the greater than expected workload faced by the Unit in the early months of the DLA scheme.

A recovery plan for clearing the backlog of correspondence is in operation at the DLA Unit and I am pleased to say significant progress is being made. The correspondence sections, both at the DLA Unit and centrally, have been strengthened and our aim is to complete the clearance of the backlog during early March. Thereafter it will be our intention to respond to all future correspondence on DLA within the Agency's target of 20 working days. We have been meeting this target for the majority of letters on DLA received since the start of the year, and I can assure you that I am monitoring the position very closely.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines he has established for the Benefits Agency to respond to requests for the release of medical records to unsuccessful applicants for disability living allowance and attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information used to decide a claim for disability living allowance or attendance allowance is made available to the claimant on request. Only medical evidence that is considered, on the advice of a medical practitioner, to be harmful to a person is withheld.

Severe Weather Payments

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to (a) reduce the number of consecutive days on which the temperature must be 0°C or below in order for severe cold weather payments to be made or (b) increase the ceiling on savings which can be held without disqualification for severe cold weather payments.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to change any of the fundamental elements of the scheme.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refreshment Facilities

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee why the Smoking Room was excluded from the scope of the inquiry into the House's refreshment facilities conducted by Food Services Associates.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The consultancy brief issued to Food Services Associates was "to examine food production and food service systems"

and to

"develop a strategic plan . . . for the re-organisation of food production and food service systems in the House of Commons".

Bars, including the Smoking Room, were excluded from the scope of the study except where changes proposed by the consultants for food service areas impinged on areas used for bars.

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what estimate he has made of the cost of implementing the proposals contained in the report of Food Services Associates to reform the refreshment facilities of the House.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The Food Service Associates report, which the Committee is currently considering, estimated the cost of equipment at £2·8 million. Before the Committee reports to the House, an estimate will be required of the total cost of any proposals, including equipment, building works, electrical and mechanical works, installation and ventilation.

EDUCATION

London Schools (Freehold Transfers)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for ensuring the transfer of the freeholds from the London residuary body to the dioceses of London and Southwark, of former voluntary maintained schools with the Inner London education authority whose freeholds transferred to the London residuary board on the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Forth: Following the abolition of the Inner London education authority there was no general need to transfer land used for the purposes of voluntary schools since it would have remained in the hands of the appropriate voluntary school trustees.

Disabled Students

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the latest statistics on the number of disabled students in further and higher education; and what future resources will be allocated to encourage more disabled people to enter these.

Mr. Boswell: A total of 42,000 students with learning difficulties and disabilities enrolled on further education courses on 1 November 1991. Information on the number of such students in higher education is not held centrally. My right hon. Friend's initial guidance to the further and higher education funding councils emphasised the need to facilitate access to further and higher education for students with learning difficulties and disabilities. Both the councils are taking account of the particular needs of these students in their allocation of resources to institutions.

Pupil Exclusions

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of young people who are or have been excluded or suspended from school also have a statement of special educational needs; and of those, what proportion have statements which refer to emotional and behavioural difficulties.

Mr. Forth: Information on permanent exclusions has been collected by the Department over a two year period beginning with the summer term 1990 under the national exclusions reporting system (NERS). A preliminary analysis of year one returns showed that 12·5 per cent. of pupils permanently excluded had statements of special educational needs. We have no information as to how many of those statements refer to emotional and behavioural difficulties.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many of the young people who have been excluded or suspended from school and who are also statemented, have had to wait more than (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) nine months and (d) one year before appropriate placement and funding were provided.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many young people, by local authority area have been (a) suspended and (b) excluded from school in each year since 1988.

Mr. Forth: The Department has been monitoring permanent exclusions from English maintained schools over a two-year period beginning with the summer term 1990 under the national exclusions reporting system (NERS). A preliminary analysis of year one NERS data shows that some 3,000 permanent exclusions were reported. It is not possible to provide an area breakdown of the figure because of assurances given as to confidentiality. The Department does not collect information on temporary exclusions.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Disabled Civil Servants

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service.

Mr. Jackson: The annual report on progress in the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service is presented in the magazine Independent published today.

The report shows that during 1992, 8,336—1·5 per cent. —registered disabled people were employed in civil service departments and agencies, an increase of 312 people over 1991. In addition to this, the civil service employs many more people with disabilities who choose not to register as disabled.

I am arranging for copies of Independent to be placed in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Hospitals (Alcohol Sales)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of hospitals have bars on hospital premises which sell alcohol for consumption by doctors.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Psychiatric Patients

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the cost to each health authority in England and Wales of providing psychiatric patients with beds in the private sector; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) and the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 23 February at column 555. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information concerning Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been diagnosed as having mesothelioma in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The number of patients who were first diagnosed as having mesothelioma in each of the last five years for which statistics are available is shown in the table.

The number of patients first diagnosed as having mesothelioma in 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987, England and Wales.

Year	Number
1983	506
1984	567
1985	545
1986	642
1987	671

Dentistry

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she will take to ensure that patients presenting themselves for treatment at dental surgeries are made aware of (a) the cost of the treatment prior to its commencement and (b) whether this treatment is available under the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: General dental practitioners are already required by thier terms of service to provide a treatment plan to patients registered with them under continuing care of capitation arrangements when they examine them for the first time. This treatment plan includes any treatment to be undertaken, an estimate of any national health service charge and any proposals for private care and treatment, including the cost to the patient.

The additionally required to provide a new or revised treatment plan when they propose to undertake complex treatment, the details of which are listed in regulations, and on any occasion when the patient so requests.

Alcohol and Drug Rehabilitation Services

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been done to inform residential alcohol and drug rehabilitation services that they are included in local authority purchasing plans.

Mr. Yeo: It is the responsibility of each local authority to assess the needs of its population for community care services, including for residential services for problems associated with the misuse of alcohol and drugs and to enter into appropriate contractual arrangements with service providers.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residential alcohol and drug rehabilitation services she expects to close within the first four months of community care.

Mr. Yeo: The Government and the local authorities have made clear the high priority they attach to the provision of services for people who misuse alcohol and drugs. The funds being made available to local authorities through the community care special transitional grant fully reflect existing levels of service provision and there is therefore no reason why services which appropriately meet the needs of this important client group should not be maintained. Special monitoring arrangements for independent sector residential services for people who misuse alcohol and drugs are being established in the first three months after the full implementation of the community care reforms on 1 April 1993.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decision has been reached on fast track assessment by the working group convened to discuss residential alcohol and drug rehabilitation services.

Mr. Yeo: At our request, the local authority associations have convened a working party, on which independent sector service providers are represented, to prepare good practice guidance on fast track assessment and on out-of-area referrals, which will enable them to issue advice to their members. It is expected that this will be available during March.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the authors of her Department's discussion document, "The Effect of Tobacco Advertising on Tobacco Consumption" came to in respect of the specific study of the effect of an advertising ban in the United Kingdom, as opposed to the review of studies from elsewhere in the world; and whether she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health's discussion document "Effect of Tobacco Advertising on Tobacco Consumption" did not make any estimate of the effect of an advertising ban in the United Kingdom.

Anaemia

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines she has issued to health authorities and family health services on the monitoring and detection of iron deficiency anaemia in children;

(2) what information she has on the number of children under the age of five years suffering from iron deficiency anaemia.

Mr. Sackville: No guidelines have been issued. Iron deficiency anaemia is a recognised risk in this age group but the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy, in considering dietary reference values for the population in 1991, reported that more information was needed on the iron status of different groups of the United Kingdom population, including infants and children.

The Government have set up a national diet and nutrition survey to monitor the nutritional status of representative groups of the population in an eight year cycle. A survey of pre-school children is currently underway. An expert group on the weaning diet is now considering the nutritional needs of infants and young children and is expected to report by the end of 1993. We will then review the need for guidelines to the national health service.

Respite Care

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the extent of charging by local councils for respite care; and if she will provide more funds for community care to councils so that they can provide this service free of charge.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

The Government take the view that local authorities should seek to recover the economic cost of providing a service wherever this can be done without causing hardship to the service user. In residential settings local authorities are required, by section 22 of the National Assistance Act 1948, to make charges, including the discretion to make a reduced charge to residents for the first eight weeks of their admission. Where non-residential respite care is provided, local authorities have discretionary powers under section 17 of the Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudications Act 1983 to charge.

We are making available in 1993-94 a ring-fenced special transitional grant of £565 million to local authorities. This also includes £140 million for authorities' new responsibilities which makes allowance for improved respite care services to support carers.

Child Protection Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken on the recommendation of the second report of the Health Committee of Session 1990-91 on child protection services that her Department and local authorities should conduct an urgent review of the relationship between changing levels of need and of resources in London with a view to establishing the validity of the standard spending assessment formula in relation to the capacity of London authorities to meet their responsibilities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The standard spending assessment formulae are being reviewed with the help of the local authority associations to take into account new information derived from the 1991 census and data from other sources. The review will be completed by autumn 1993 and is likely to affect standard spending assessment formulae for the financial year 1994-95. The review will take into account the outcome of research sponsored by the Department into avoidable and unavoidable factors affecting unit costs in London.

Suicide

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the five most common occupations of people committing suicide; what information she has on the number of farmers who have committed suicide in each year since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The most recent information available from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys concerns the numbers of deaths which have occurred during the period 1979 to 1990, combined, and is shown in table 1. The numbers, however, are simply numbers of deaths where the stated occupation was of a particular type and consequently do not take any account of the actual numbers employed in those occupations. A large number of deaths in a particular occupation therefore may simply indicate that more people are employed in that occupation rather than that employment in that occupation may lead to an increased likelihood of suicide.

As a consequence of the limitations of working with numbers of deaths, without reference to the numbers employed in the occupation group, or groups, of interest, the OPCS favours the use of proportional mortality ratios. A PMR gives an indication of how a particular occupation's mortality from a specific cause differs from the collective experience of all occupations for that specific cause. To cite the case of male farmers aged 16 to 64 years of age for the period 1979 to 1990, inclusive, the PMR of 187 suggests that the number of deaths was nearly twice that which would have been expected, 100 being taken as the experience of all males aged 16 to 64 regardless of occupation. Table 2 shows the five highest PMRS by occupation.

In the case of both tables the information refers to males only aged 16 to 64 years. Information for both males and females, many of whom do not state a specific occupation, for the same period could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Both tables show the corresponding numbers of deaths and PMRs for comparative purposes.

Table 1

The five most common occupations (ranked according to the number of deaths) of males aged 16-64 years recorded as having committed suicide or where the death was undetermined (E950—E959 and E980—E989, 1979-90 (combined) England and Wales.

Occupation	Deaths	PMR
Clerk and cashier (not retail)	1,342	97
Occupation not stated (to include those seeking employment)	1,323	136
Driver of road goods vehicle	1,029	82
Machine tool operator	927	106
Metal working production fitter and fitter/machinist	790	82

Table 2

The five most common occupations (ranked according to Proportional Mortality Ratio) of males aged 16-64 years recorded as having committed suicide or where the death was undetermined (E950—E959 and E980—E989), 1979-90 (combined) England and Wales.

Occupation	PMR	Deaths
Vet	364	35
Pharmacist	217	51
Dental practitioner	204	38
Farmer	187	526
Medical practitioner	184	152

Using data on occupational collected at death registration for the years 1979-90 the Proportional Mortality Ratios (PMRs) for men aged 16-64 years have been calculated. The PMR gives an indication of how a particular occupation's mortality from a specific cause (in this case E950—E959 and E980—E989) differs from the collective experience of the same age-group as a whole for that specific cause and regardless of occupation. Thus a PMR of 364 for Vets suggests that this particular occupation group experiences more than 3½ times the number of deaths from suicide and undetermined deaths (E950—E959 and E980—E989) than would have been expected.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of registrations of deaths with a verdict of suicide ICD E950 to E959 in each county in England and Wales in each year since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 23 February 1993]: The exact information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the number of deaths from suicide—E950 to E959—is readily available by county of residence and is as follows.

Number of deaths from suicide (E950 to E959) for each county in England and Wales, 1979 to 1985

TRANSPORT

Disabled Drivers

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of road accidents involve disabled drivers; and what proportion of the overall driving population are disabled drivers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Statistics are not available for disabled drivers.

Cycle Helmets

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has commissioned on the safety benefits of cycle helmets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Transport Research Laboratory report, "Pedal Cycle Accidents—A Hospital Based Study", indicates that if helmets were universally worn over 4,000 casulaties would be prevented and the severity of over 3,000 serious casualties would be reduced. Child cyclists, in particular, would benefit from wearing helmets.

The Department is also carrying out further research into the design of protective headgear for pedal cyclists and motorcyclists.

Puffin Road Crossings

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the success of the experimental puffin road crossings scheme; what was the cost of establishing the scheme; how these costs were met; and what plans he has to extend the puffin road crossings scheme to other areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Assessments at two trial sites have shown puffin crossings to be successful in allowing more time for pedestrians to cross, particularly disabled and elderly people, without increasing delays to traffic. The Department is currently funding installations at 25 sites in England at an average cost of 8,800 each. They will begin to come into operation this spring. Further installations are expected later in the year and early next year. Regulations will be laid to enable local authorities to install puffins.

Road Building

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the use of porous asphalt in road building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since I announced in July 1992 that the Department would be taking steps to reduce road noise, I have received many representations from local authorities, representatives and from the general public for the use of porous asphalt on road schemes. Assessments are being carried out to establish whether the conditions for the use of porous asphalt are suitable and the benefits outweigh the higher cost including the need for more expensive winter maintenance and more frequent surfacing.

Minibuses

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how minibuses are treated as a category in the compilation of accident statistics; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the Government will in future treat minibuses as a separate category in the compilation of accident statistics.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since 1989, it has been possible to link the vehicle registration mark of vehicles involved in personal injury road accidents recorded by the police to vehicle data held at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Authority in Swansea. This link allows the identification of minibuses involved in road accidents according to vehicle construction definitions held at DVLA.

Twyford Down (Private Detectives)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of hiring Bray private investigators to examine the background of persons protesting against the road through Twyford Down.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department has not employed Bray's Detective Agency (Southampton) Ltd. to examine the background of persons protesting against the M3 through Twyford Down. They have been employed to serve papers on people who have trespassed on the Department's land and to photograph trespassers. To date the agency has been paid approximately £7,000 for this work.

A1 (M) Bypasses

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the operational costs of the bypasses for the A1(M) for (a) Bartley, (b) Chester le Street, (c) Darlington, (d) Durham and (e) Newton Aycliffe.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The 27-mile, 43 km, A1M from the North Yorkshire County Durham boundary to south of Tyneside was built as a single strategic route, not as a series of bypasses and opened in sections over the period between 19[illegible]5 and 1969. The average annual route maintenance cost over the last five years was £0·5 million per year. The average major maintenance over the same period was £2 million per year.

Driving Licences

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what charges are payable to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency for renewing a personal driving licence; and when these charges were introduced.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since 1 February 1992, the fee for the three-yearly renewal of an ordinary motor car driving licence from age 70 has been £6. The fee to renew large goods and passenger-carrying vehicle licences at age 45 and five-yearly thereafter up to age 60, when annual renewals are required is £21.

There is no charge for licences renewed for medical reasons.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Valued Added Tax

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to revise VAT leaflet 701/10/85 explicitly to include printed educational matter designed to be stored on ring binder collections as one of the zero-rated items.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has no such plans. Revision of VAT leaflets, including VAT Leaflet 701/10/85, is a matter for the Commissioners of Customs and Excise as part of their responsibilities for care and management of the tax. I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to his other question of today's date on the VAT liability of printed educational matter.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if VAT applies to printed educational matter designed to be stored on ring binder collections; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Collections of printed matter including that of an educational nature supplied with ring binders in their complete state are zero-rated as loose-leaf books, but the relief has not hitherto extended to such items when supplied in instalments. Customs and Excise has recently reviewed the position and now considers that such products should be within the zero rate. It has taken administrative action by extra-statutory concession to allow this.

Ministers' Cars

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the provisions of Inland Revenue booklet 480 of 1992 apply to Ministers of the Crown in respect of (a) availability of a car for private use, (b) provision of a chauffeur in connection with a car made available for private use and (c) provision of [illegible] amount of petrol for private use of a car; what steps are taken to ensure that such fringe benefits for Ministers of the Crown are correctly entered on P11D forms; what was the approximate aggregate yield for each available year since 1988-89 of each of those benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Ministers of the Crown are subject to the same tax provisions as other employees. The rules for cars, chauffeurs and petrol apply to them in the same way as to others. It is the responsibility of each employer to give the Inland Revenue at the end of each tax year particulars of any benefits in kind provided to employees. Departments are aware of their obligations as employers. The Inland Revenue reviews their compliance with these obligations as it does with other employers. The yield from benefits in kind provided to Ministers of the Crown is not available.

Sovereign Debts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he proposes to the regulations used in determining the provisions allowable for tax purposes against sovereign debts held by banks.

Mr. Dorrell: The original regulation made in December 1990 which set out the rules to be used in arriving at the maximum tax deduction available for doubtful sovereign debt follow broadly the existing Bank of England guidelines, commonly known as the Bank of England matrix. The Bank intends to make certain improvements to the matrix to make it simpler and easier to operate; these changes are to have effect for periods ending on or after 30 June 1993. We have decided that similar changes should be made to the regulations used for tax purposes.

The Inland Revenue is today making available in draft form the amending regulations. I am placing a copy in the House of Commons Library. Further copies are available on request from the Inland Revenue, to which representations on the draft regulations should be sent by 8 April 1993.

The amending regulations are subject to the affirmative resolution procedure and will be brought before the House in the usual way in due course.

Economic Recovery

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has established a programme to utilise the additional Community funds for economic recovery agreed at the Edinburgh European Council; and if he will list the projects to be submitted for funding.

Sir John Cope: The Edinburgh declaration covered many national and Community measures, the cumulative effect of which is intended to boost confidence, growth and jobs, so as to promote recovery. Such recovery would bring with it many new projects, particularly in the private sector, but it is of course impossible separately to identify all those arising as a direct result of the proposals agreed at Edinburgh. One particular proposal agreed was the establishment of a special 5 billion ecu facility within the European investment bank to provide finance for infrastructure projects within the Community. The EIB has already approved a number of loans from this facility, including some projects in the United Kingdom.

Agricultural Partnership Tenancies

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress the Inland Revenue has made in resolving the jurisdictional problems over the valuation of agricultural partnership tenancies and the role of the special commissioners; and if he will make a statement on the current practice of the Revenue in such cases.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue is awaiting the judgment from the lands tribunal on one such case. This judgment may help to clarify the question of jurisdiction. Meanwhile, the Inland Revenue is, when requested, deferring action on similar cases.

A number of representations have been made about this issue and we are keeping the position under review.

Consultants

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contracts for consultancies were awarded by his Department over (a) the last 12 months and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury introduced a new computerised system for purchasing goods and services during 1991-92. The records for that year are incomplete. Sixteen consultancy contracts are recorded as having been awarded in 1991-92; 47 have been awarded so far in 1992-93. Comprehensive information for 1991-92 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Savings Accounts

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements now exist for individuals to invest in savings accounts separate sums below £20.

Mr. Nelson: A large number of financial institutions offer savings accounts which allow customers to invest less than £20.

European Investment Fund

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to revise the terms of the EC treaties to take account of the decision at the Edinburgh European Council relating to a European investment fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Council of Ministers has agreed that an intergovernmental conference should be called for the purpose of agreeing an amendment to the statute of the European investment bank which will enable the governors of the bank to establish the European investment fund. The statute of the European investment bank is a protocol to the treaty of Rome. Once agreed, the amendment will need to be ratified by member states.

Currency Trading

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made about the percentage of currency trading in the London financial markets which is necessary for settling accounts in traded goods and services.

Mr. Nelson: The Bank of England has estimated, in the November Quarterly Bulletin, that daily turnover of foreign exchange trading in London is around $300 billion. However, it is not possible to estimate the value of trade in goods and services to which this is related because a large but indeterminate proportion of foreign exchange trading in London is connected with trade between third countries. Furthermore, it would be misleading to suggest that the only foreign exchange transactions necessary for trade in goods and services are those settling accounts; much trade would not take place at all were the foreign exchange markets not able to facilitate the hedging of currency risks associated with trade and with investment.

White-collar Civil Servants

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to control the growth in the number of white collar staff in Government Departments.

Mr. Portillo: Departments' use of staff resources is controlled through limits placed on their running costs expenditure. Running costs provision and staffing plans are set out in the statistical supplement to the 1992 autumn statement (Cm. 2219). These imply a fall from 569,000 civil servants in 1992-93 to 553,000 in 1995-96. The Government have also announced, in the "Citizen's Charter: First Report" (Cm. 2101), market-testing targets covering activities currently performed by over 40,000 civil servants.

Family Incomes

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 545-58, concerning the proportion of households of different types within each quintile group of equivalised disposable income, if he will publish similar figures for decile groups.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The figures are given in the table:

Family Expenditure

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average expenditure by a family with one earner and two children on (a) average earnings, (b) 50 per cent. of the average earnings and (c) 150 per cent. of the average earnings on (i) food, (ii) domestic fuel, (iii) newspapers and books, (iv) fares, (v) children's clothing and footwear and (vi) all items which are currently zero rated for VAT, giving the most recent available data.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The estimates given in the table are derived from the 1991 family expenditure survey. The estimates are based upon a sample of 50 households grouped around each level of earnings. Because of the small sample size the figures are subject to considerable sampling variations. The figures are rounded to the nearest 10p.

[1] Item (vi) includes items (i-v), NHS prescription charges and payments for NHS medical appliances and Water and Sewerage. Expenditure on 'Construction of new dwellings' which is also zero-rated, is not included as no figures are available.

Income Tax

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for how many (a) working and (b) non-working people who do not pay income tax in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The latest estimate is that about 21·2 million people over 16 do not pay income tax in 1992-93, of whom about 4·1 million have some earnings.

Banks (Winding-up Orders)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to require banks to declare annually the number of winding-up orders they have obtained.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 23 February 1993]: I have no such proposals.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent on official entertainment in his Department during 1991-92 and 1992-93 to date.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 24 February 1993]: Expenditure on official entertainment for 1991-92 was £86,162. For 1992-93 expenditure to date is £253,609. The large increase in 1992-93 results from a number of one-off events, including ECOFIN meetings during the United Kingdom presidency.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Consultants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) Coopers and Lybrand management consultants, (b) Touche Ross management consultants, (c) Price Waterhouse management consultants, (d) Ernst and Young management consultants, (e) Chrichton Roberts Ltd, (f) KPMG management consultants and (g) Leopold Joseph management consultants, with the total cost of the contracts with each contractor, for (i) the past 12 months and (ii) 1991-92.

Haiti

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further steps are being taken by Her Majesty's Government in support of the restoration of human rights and democracy in Haiti.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to support the efforts of the United Nations and the Organisation of American States to broker a settlement. Along with EC partners we issued a statement on 15 December 1992 condemning continued human rights abuses and demanding a return to constitutional order; and on 21 January 1993 issued a further statement in support of United Nations-Organisation of American States efforts and rejecting recent elections in Haiti as invalid and undemocratic.

Iraq

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the time scale for the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction in Iraq; and what steps are being taken to ensure that the location of such weapons becomes known to the United Nations inspectors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Special Commission on Iraq and the International Atomic Energy Agency are charged with the elimination of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. They will continue to conduct inspections until they are satisfied that all prohibited weapons, components and facilities have been destroyed, removed or rendered harmless.

The international community continues to press Iraq to comply with its obligation to make full declarations of all WMD-related items. Individual Governments provide further information as to the possible location of such items.

Note: The figures do not include contracts issued by those executive agencies which have delegated authority to engage consultants.

Airline Product Development Subsidies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision in the US/EC agreement on limitation of airline product development subsidies is made for spillover effects from defence programmes; and what monitoring mechanisms for this agreement are in place.

Mr. Sainsbury: The agreement limits all indirect Government support which benefits the development or production of civil aircraft, whether or not such support was originally directed towards military projects. These limits are 3 per cent. of annual commercial turnover of the civil aircraft industry, or 4 per cent. of the turnover of any one firm.

The agreement provides for an annual exchange of information between the parties and twice-yearly meetings.

Most-favoured Nations

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what countries have most-favoured nation status with the European Community; what trading advantages this provides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Article I of the general agereement on tariffs and trade requires GATT contracting parties to apply their external trade regimes, including customs tariffs, to all other contracting parties in the same way and without discrimination. The advantages of this so-called most-favoured nation provision are clarity and certainty of rights and obligations in international trade. The European community grants basic most-favoured nation status to all countries, although a number of countries, particularly developing countries, enjoy preferential trading status with the Community under special arrangements for that purpose.

Coal Research Establishment

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had about the future of the coal research establishment.

Mr. Eggar: Clean coal technology and the future role of the coal research establishment in developing this technology is under discussion as part of our work on the coal review. My Department's chief scientific adviser on science and technology has visited the coal research establishment.

Leyland DAF

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 313, when was the contact of the Minister of State with his Dutch opposite number to which he referred; which Dutch Minister he contacted; and if the contact was by meeting or by telephone.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 24 February 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry spoke to his opposite number, Mr. Koos Andriessen, the Dutch Economic Affairs Minister, by telephone on 4 February 1993.

Mineworkers' Redundancy Payments

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the current mineworkers' redundancy terms will also apply to miners at the 21 pits in the coal review if any are made redundant after 27 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 February 1993]: As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made clear to the House on 20 January, the issue of redundancy after March 1993 will be dealt with in the White Paper.

Textiles

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he has taken to implement the RETEX scheme of European Community assistance to regions heavily dependent on textile and clothing employment.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The United Kingdom has sent to the European Commission two programmes under the RETEX initiative for the eligible textile areas of Great Britain and Northern Ireland respectively. The Commission has not yet replied.

A call for applications has already been made and once the Commission agrees the programme, projects will be considered by the RETEX programme monitoring committee for approval.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has received from the apparel and textile industry on export promotion issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 25 February 1993]: Ministers and officials have many contacts with a wide range of industry bodies which give rise to discussions on export promotion issues and we always take careful note of their views.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures are being taken by the European Community to combat fraudulent evasion of quotas on textiles; what estimates are available on the extent of fraudulent trade; what similar information is available on measures taken in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 25 February 1993]: The European Community has agreed, for the first time, a budget of 500,000 ecus to deal with suspected fraudulent trade in textiles and clothing. It will fund the activities of EC anti-fraud squads which will pursue cases on the basis of information supplied by member states to the Commission. In addition, the EC has agreed with certain supplier countries intensified monitoring of trade in goods where fraud is suspected. There are no official estimates of fraudulent textiles trade involving the European Community. As regards the USA, my Department has recently passed to Her Majesty's Customs and the European Commission an indication from the United States customs service that it would welcome co-operation in tackling fraudulent textiles trade.

Spring Ram Factory, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the first payment was made for the development of the Spring Ram factory in Bradford.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 25 February 1993]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 9 February 1993, Official Report, columns 568-69.

Tobacco

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the impact of the European single market on the retail tobacco trade; what is his assessment of its impact; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 25 February 1993]: My right hon. Friend has not received any specific representations about the impact of the European single market on the retail tobacco trade. The Government are well aware of the concerns of the trade, and the United Kingdom producers, about the possible implications of the single market and are keeping a close watch for any abuses. However, it is too early to be sure what impact there may have been on the retail trade.

Expo '92

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has received for the future use of the British trade pavilion used at the Expo '92 exhibition in Seville; and what decisions he has taken.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to the reply, 16 February 1993, Official Report, col. 135]: I am pleased to announce that contracts to sell the pavilion were signed today, Friday 26 February 1993. The purchasers are Asiansky TV, who will dismantle the pavilion and relocate it in Brent as the key feature of an Asian centre development.

Somerset University

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 563, when he approved the use of the name

"Somerset University" under the Business Names Act 1985; and whether the statement submitted to him by the owner of that business stated that a written request for an opinion had been made to the Secretry of State for Education.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The use of the name was approved on 9 November 1988. The regulations which specified the word university as requiring the approval of the Secretary of State did not come into effect until 1 January 1983, and did not apply to names in use before that date. Since there was evidence that the name had been in use before that date there was no requirement for the owner of the business to submit a statement from the Department of Education and Science.

INDEX TO THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES

VOLUME 219

SESSION 1992–93

15th February, 1993—26th February, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
